Beame Gives U.S. Notice Of Social Security Pullout

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Mayor Beame yesterday filed notice that the city would withdraw from the Social Security system two years from now if studies confirmed tentative estimates that withdrawing might save the city up to $200 million annually. The unusual step, in which the Mayor did not actually make a decision to pull out but only started the two-year notice period required under Federal law, was considered at the very least a dramatic bargaining move in the Mayor's fight for more Federal aid to help the city through its current austerity period.

But city officials insisted that the withdrawal, which was immediately denounced by the municipal labor unions, would be carried out on March 31, 1978, if studies warranted it. A vow to fight the withdrawal was immediately issued

Miss Hearst Being Urged To Testify Against Others

By WALLACE TURNER

SAN FRANCISCO, March 22—Pressure has begun to build on Patricia Hearst to testify against her former associates and thus possibly obtain leniency from the Federal Government.

Federal District Judge Oliver J. Carter told Miss Hearst Saturday, after her conviction on bank robbery charges, that the degree to which she cooperated in an interview later this week with a Federal probation officer would influence the sentence she received.

But sources familiar with the wishes of the prosecutors who want to use her testimony say that the probation interview will merely be the first of a series of tests that Miss Hearst will face as other aspects of her kidnapping and captivity are brought before grand juries and courts.

JERSEY WORKERS VOTE TO ACCEPT BUS-LINE OFFER

Union Membership Overrides Leadership on Proposal by Transport of Jersey

By WOLFGANG SAXON
Drivers, clerks and mechanics of New Jersey's largest bus company, Transport of New Jersey, overrode their union leadership last night and voted, by a slim margin, to accept management's latest contract offer and end their two-week strike.

The vote opened the way for resumption of bus service late in the week for 225,000 round-trip riders of Transport of New Jersey, including 100,000 commuters who cross the Hudson to New York and back.

A report from the union hall of the Amalgamated Transit Union in Irvington, N. J., was that the vote was 1,546 to 1,441 for acceptance of the company's proposal for a two-year contract. The leadership of the union had recommended rejection by the rank and file, hoping to hold out for a more favorable cost-of-living escalator provision.

A union spokesman said the leadership was "very disappointed." He said negotiators for Amalgamated would meet with company officials today to put the finishing touches on the settlement and "get it signed." Union mechanics will report for work tomorrow, he said.

Partial Restoration

A spokesman for the company, Anthony L. Grazioso, said that after a day of inspection of the rolling stock the carrier's drivers would report back to work on Thursday for a partial restoration of service. Full bus schedules should be in effect with Friday's morning commuter rush, he said.

As explained by Mr. Grazioso last night, the proposal narrowly accepted by the workers provides for no salary increase as such but for a "guaranteed" 6 percent cost-of-living increase to be paid in each of the two years covered by the new contract, even if the rate of inflation falls well below that level.

In addition, he said, the cost-of-living adjustment could grow by an additional 2 percent to a maximum of 8 percent each year if the cost-of-living index were to rise by more than 6 percent a year.

As a result, he said, drivers' hourly wages will rise from the present $9.96 to $7.80 in December and to $7.80 in December 1977. If the maximum 8 percent adjustment were to be come effective, the pay scale would reach $9.08 an hour by the end of next year.

Rejection Recommended
Union leaders had insisted on a straight wage increase plus generous cost-of-living provisions, and the company's refusal to grant their demand led the leaders to recommend rejection at a union meeting in East Brunswick Sunday.

The 3,400 union members voted at the offices of their eight locals on strike since March 9, and the results were tabulated at the Irvington union hall. "It's what the rank and file wanted," commented Tom Huntzinger, the union's state vice chairman, after the

PARTS MONOPOLY BY G.M. CHARGED

More Competition on Crash
Items Sought by F.T.C.
Company Defends System

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 22—The Government charged the General Motors Corporation today with monopoly control of crash replacement parts for its autos, a practice that is allegedly costly to the public and to independent repair shops.

The Federal Trade Commission's antitrust complaint, while formally aimed at G.M., could force all the major auto makers into greater repair competition. Each now exercises strong controls over the production and sale of crash parts—items such as fenders, doors, bumpers and grills.

In Detroit, Thomas R. Murphy, G.M.'s chairman, said, "We are convinced that the current distribution system does not violate any law and we intend to defend it vigorously."

Owen M. Johnson, director of the F.T.C.'s Bureau of Competition, said at a news conference that G.M. "has intentionally maintained a monopoly and monopoly power over the distribution of crash parts." He

A Japanese Dives Plane Into House Of Lockheed Agent

By RICHARD HALLORAN

TOKYO, Tuesday, March 23—A young Japanese actor apparently tried to kill Yoshio Kodama, the rightist power broker involved in the Lockheed scandal here, by crashing a light plane into Mr. Kodama's home this morning.

According to police reports the pilot, tentatively identified as Micsuyasu Maeno, was killed instantly. Mr. Kodama escaped unhurt, though his home was set afire.

Attempts were made, but were unsuccessful, to confirm the identity of Mr. Maeno and to determine a motive for what seemed to reflect the kamikaze of World War II. He was believed to have worked once for the Nikkatsu Company, a leading film-maker, in minor roles. Mr. Maeno, 29 years old, was reported to have played pilots' roles after receiving his flying license in February of last year.

BEIRUT RIGHTISTS IN COUNTERATTACK

With Support of Artillery,
Gunmen Fight to Regain Battered Holiday Inn

By JAMES M. MARKHAM

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Tuesday, March 23—Supported by heavy artillery fire, right-wing Christian militiamen counterattacked yesterday in a daylong bid to recapture their hotel stronghold in downtown Beirut, and close-quarter fighting was still under way last night.

It was not clear who held the scarred 26-story hotel, the Holiday Inn, which Moslem and leftist gunmen seized on Sunday, and some reports said the opposing sides were fighting inside it.

One hundred persons were said to have been killed in Beirut during the day as many parts of the city came under heavy shelling. Right-wing Christian Phalangists poured artillery fire into the city's heavily Moslem western neighborhoods, and Moslem and leftist forces bombarded the eastern heavily Christian quarters with mortar rounds and rockets.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister

By MURRAY SCHUMACH

Carnegie Hall will open today a drive for $6.5 million that will be highlighted by a concert on May 18 that will include such artists as Vladimir Horowitz, Leonard Bernstein, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, Mstislav Rostropovich, Isaac Stern, Martina Arroyo and members of the New York Philharmonic.

The heads of more than 1,000 corporations in the country—300 of them in New York City—will be asked to buy seats at $1,000 each, thus virtually guaranteeing that the 85-year-old concert hall will have $2.5 million by the night of the concert, when the international artists will perform on a stage decorated to bring back memories of such Carnegie artists as

Kissinger Says U.S. Will Not Tolerate Any Further Cuban Intervention Abroad

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

DALLAS, March 22—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger warned Cuba again today that the United States would refuse to countenance the use of Cuban troops to bring about another Angola—even against white minority regimes opposed by this country in Africa.

He repeated that Washington would not support the white minority Rhodesian government, but added that this did not mean that Washington would back any effort to topple Ian D. Smith's government through the use of Cuban forces now in Angola.

"We are certain that the American people understand and support these two equal principles of our policy—our support for majority rule in Africa and our firm opposition to military intervention."

Frustration Indicated

Expressing the Administration's continued frustration with its inability to prevent the Soviet-backed faction from taking power in Angola with the help of 12,000 Cuban troops, Mr. Kissinger said:

"The United States cannot acquiesce indefinitely in the presence of Cuban expeditionary forces in distant lands for the purpose of pressure and to determine the political evolution by force of arms."

He noted that "we have issued these warnings before," he said. "The United States will not accept further Cuban military interventions abroad."

Mr. Kissinger did not say what the Administration would do in case of further intervention.

Previously, he warned the Soviet Union that relations with Moscow could not survive "another Angola."

Some Administration officials have suggested that if Cuban forces were introduced into the Rhodesian situation, action might be taken in this hemisphere to reimpose the hemispheric economic and diplomatic boycott of Cuba, which was lifted last year.

Reporters traveling to Dallas aboard Mr. Kissinger's Air Force jet this afternoon were told that the Administration had no specific plan to counter any possible Cuban intervention but rather preferred to keep the various alternatives open.

Washington's problem has been compounded by the fact that the most likely area of new confrontation, in Rhodesia, is an area where the United States has already condemned the Smith Government for its breakaway from Britain and for its refusal to show flexibility in negotiations, now broken down, with black leaders.

Mr. Kissinger has appeared to be ambiguous at times. On the one hand, he has constantly warned Cuba against further intervention. Yet, last week, Mr. Kissinger told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the United States would "do nothing" to help the white minority government in exercising authority.

The text of Mr. Kissinger's speech was distributed in advance of his dinner address to the Dallas World Affairs Council, co-sponsored by various other groups. This was another of Mr. Kissinger's periodic visits to cities outside of Washington, to explain and win support for the Administration's foreign policy.

Dual Policy Defined

Tonight's speech was an attempt to express a dual policy: that the United States would support efforts to create majority-rule governments and enforce minority rights, both through aiding states like Mozambique, and in urging negotiations in Rhodesia, while at the same time taking a firm stand against intervention.

He warned Mozambique, for instance, that the United States would not support "those who rely on Cuban troops."

Most of the address was devoted to questions of American defense policy, including a rebuttal of those critics who have accused the Administration of falling behind the Soviet Union and in not taking a strong enough stand in the talks on limitation of strategic arms.

A persistent theme of Mr. Kissinger's remarks was that the Soviet Union and the United States were inevitably going to follow nuclear policies of equilibrium, in which neither was likely to have a strategic advantage over the other.

But he again stressed that in conditions of nuclear parity, "world peace is more likely to be threatened by shifts in the local regional balances—in Europe, the Middle East, Asia, Latin America, or Africa—than by strategic nuclear attack."

Alluding to the recent events in Angola and Congressional refusal to support the Administration's effort to back the factions opposed to the Soviet-supported one, Mr. Kissinger said:

"If leaders around the world come to assume that the United States lacks either the forces or the will to resist while others intervene to impose solutions, they will accommodate themselves to what they will regard as the dominant trend."

"And an unopposed superpower may draw dangerous conclusions when the next opportunity for intervention beckons," Mr. Kissinger said. This would, in time, he said, lead to a shift in world power and influence away from the United States.

"We are not the world's policeman," he said, "but we cannot permit the Soviet Union or its surrogates to become the world's policeman either, if we care anything about our security and the fate of freedom in the world."

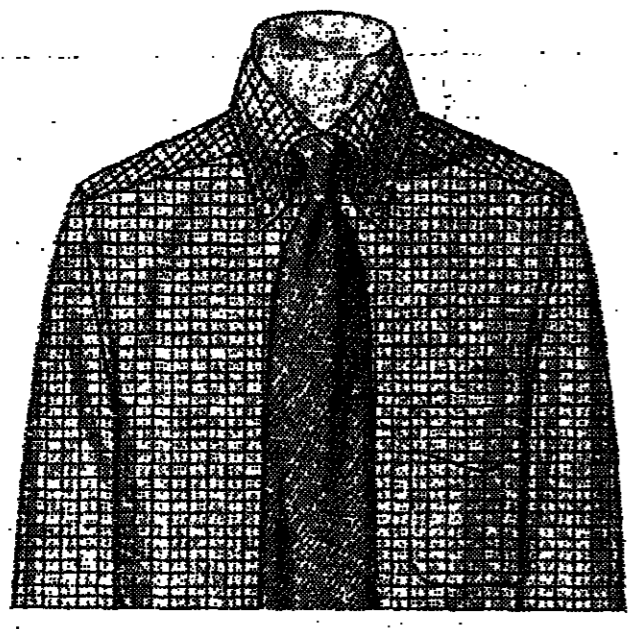

Referring to those who have criticized the United States for not building enough strategic weapons, while at the same time criticizing the Administration's policies in Angola, Mr. Kissinger said that "it does no good to preach strategic superiority while practicing regional retreat."

Dangerous Example Seen

He said the Angolan example was dangerous because "the legislatively imposed failure" would lead "to further Soviet and Cuban pressures on the mistaken assumption that America has lost the will to counter adventurism or even to help others to do so."

"It is time therefore to be clear that as far as we are concerned, Angola has set no precedent," Mr. Kissinger said. "It is time that the world be reminded that America remains capable of forthright and decisive action."

Mr. Kissinger's last speech away from Washington, in Boston 10 days ago, was a sharp attack on critics of the Administration's policies and drew criticism from Ronald Reagan, the Republican opponent, and Senator Henry M. Jackson, a Democratic contender.

Soviet and the U.S. Are Shifting Hot Line to Satellite Systems

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, March 22—Soviet and American communications experts have successfully tested a new network of space satellites that will eventually replace the existing Washington-Moscow hot line.

However, the system, originally envisioned for use by late 1974, is not expected to start operating until the second half of this year, according to Willis K. Naehrer, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Communications.

Mr. Naehrer, whose delegation of specialists wound up a week-long working visit here today, reported that actual activation of the system had been held off.

U.S. Offers to Exchange Soviet Agent for American

WASHINGTON, March 22—The State Department has proposed to the Soviet Government that it exchange Sarjis O. Paskalian, who pleaded guilty last September to a charge of spying for Moscow, for an American intelligence agent now in Soviet custody, an American official confirmed today.

The official said he did not know the identity of the American agent or whether the Soviet Government had responded favorably to the proposal.

Mr. Paskalian, a 36-year-old Armenian, was arrested last June in New York by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and charged with having transmitted a top secret study of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to Soviet agents. He was sentenced to 25 years in prison, a term he is now serving at the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas.

up by Soviet difficulties in launching the Molniya III satellites, which will provide one of the two parallel channels in the network. Mr. Naehrer said the Russians finally had three such satellites functioning and "they expect to have the fourth bird in orbit sometime this month."

The new system of American Intelsat and Soviet Molniya satellites is intended to provide more reliable emergency communications between the two capitals. It will take over from a trans-Atlantic cable and radio system in existence for a dozen years. The overland line has been subject to occasional disruption, with parts of the cable blacked out by fire, pilfered and once plowed up by a Finnish farmer.

While joint energy, housing and trade commission meetings were canceled amid much publicity by Washington last week to protest Soviet involvement in Angola, Mr. Naehrer's delegation began work quietly here last Monday. It has since visited Soviet facilities and transmitted test messages over both the Molniya and Intelsat networks.

The Soviet Union originally planned a single station near Moscow to handle the Soviet end of both the Molniya and Intelsat links. But the Russians later decided to construct another Intelsat station in the western Ukraine, about 50 miles from Lvov. The American specialists visited both stations. Final testing over the Intelsat system will be started early next month.

The Americans have a Molniya station at Fort Detrick in Frederick, Md., and an Intelsat station at Etam, West Virginia.

Ford Gets Nixon Report, Calls It Useful

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 22— President Ford received last week former President Nixon's report on his recent trip to China and found it "very interesting and useful," the White House press secretary, Ron Nessen, said today.

White House Press Office Was Not Informed of Its Arrival Last Week

Mr. Nessen said that he did not know the contents of the report and could not describe them. No details about the report were available this afternoon from either the National Security Council or the State Department.

House official in charge of liaison with former Presidents or members of their families, brought back two copies of the Nixon report from San Clemente. The copies were received by Lieut. Gen. Brent Scowcroft, the director of the National Security Council.

Copies Are Returned
Mr. Nessen said that General Scowcroft gave one copy to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger last Monday and the other copy to the President on Tuesday.

Both copies were sent back to Mr. Nixon this past weekend at the request of the former President. According to Mr. Nessen, only four people in the Ford Administration read the report and no copies were retained.

The four were the President, Secretary Kissinger, General Scowcroft and George Bush, the director of Central Intelligence. President Ford's nominee as the United States representative in Peking, Thomas Gates, was not shown a copy of the report.

The only record of Mr. Nixon's report retained by the Administration, according to Mr. Nessen, is a half page of handwritten notes taken by General Scowcroft.

contain some "sensitive information" but added, "I think it would be unfair to say that the report didn't contain any new startling information."

Mr. Nessen was unable to explain why no copies of the report were made by the Administration before Mr. Nixon's copies were mailed back to San Clemente this weekend. Mr. Nessen said that as far as he knew, Mr. Nixon had not asked that the Administration refrain from making copies.

Mr. Nessen was also unable to say why the contents of the report were not made public. When Mr. Nixon's trip to China was first announced, President Ford said several times that the former president was going as a private citizen and that he had not asked for a report from Mr. Nixon when he returned.

Mr. Nixon was the first American to have extensive discussions with high-ranking Chinese leaders since the recent death of Chou En-lai and the subsequent shakeup of the Chinese leadership.

Zaire Spurs Reconciliation With the Victors in Angola

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times

KINSHASA, Zaire, March 22 — The command post here of the Angolan nationalist faction that was backed by Zaire in the Angolan civil war is empty.

The slogans that were daubed on walls in support of the leader of the National Front for the Liberation of Angola, Holden Roberto, have been scraped off. No one in the lesser ranks of Government claims to know where Mr. Roberto is.

The 14-year effort of military, moral and economic support by President Mobutu Sese Seko for the National Front has come to an abrupt halt, and the hostility so evident here two months ago for the victorious Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola has given way to reconciliation that has stopped just short of diplomatic recognition.

Three weeks ago President Mobutu and President Agostinho Neto, who in previous months had reviled each other as stooges of either imperialism or Soviet adventurism, clasped hands, smiled and signed a declaration affirming their desire for normal relations.

Examples of Reconciliation
"You Westerners have a lot to learn from us about reconciliation," said a Zairian official. "Look, Mobutu's Minister of Information used to be the Minister of Information for Antoinette Gizenga, Mobutu's worst enemy. The head of the police once led a rebellion against Mobutu, and I know people who have dinner with other people who they know killed their relatives. And meanwhile you Americans are still fighting the Nazis."

Certainly the ability to eradicate grudges is one of the more resilient qualities of African political life. In the case of Angola and Zaire, there were compelling reasons on both sides for the sudden burying of the hatchet.

To begin with, there are the million or so Angolan refugees in Zaire. Most of these have fled from northern Angola and, while politically they are not particularly vocal, they are tribally associated with Mr. Roberto and could prove to be a problem for Angola if they were armed or permitted to raid.

With the new Angolan Government now concentrating on cleaning up resistance in the south from the third nationalist faction, the National Union for the Total Liberation of Angola, the Luanda Government has set a high priority on pacifying the northern regions as quickly as it can.

Meanwhile, Angola has 6,000 former Angolan militiamen from what had been the secessionist Congolese province of Katanga. These men, who have been in exile for 14 years, are armed and have fought for their living first for the Portuguese and later for the Popular Movement.

have sworn to return to their homeland and topple President Mobutu.

President Mobutu's Government is currently overwhelmed with economic problems. A 42 percent devaluation last week has raised the prospects of urban unrest. In this setting an irredentist force of Katangese would seriously endanger his stability.

Thus, according to Western diplomats, a major trade-off in the reconciliation effected at the one-day meeting in Brazzaville was that of the Katangese for the Angolan refugees. On paper the agreement called for the repatriation of those who wished to return home through the auspices of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, but diplomats in this capital say that what the agreement truly called for was the curbing by both states of people who could make trouble across the mutual border.

Then, too, it is presumed by observers here that another trade-off concerned Mr. Roberto and Mr. Gizenga. The leader of the National Front has lived most of his life in Zaire and has close ties to Mr. Mobutu. Though defeated he still commands allegiance of the Bakongo tribesmen of northern Angola and could spearhead a secessionist effort there if he were permitted a base.

Gizenga in Europe
Similarly, Mr. Gizenga, a disciple of the assassinated leftist leader Patrice Lumumba, has recently proclaimed from his exile in Europe that he would soon be returning to Africa to begin his struggle against Mr. Mobutu. Sources here say that Mr. Gizenga has no following inside Zaire.

Nevertheless, given what is expected to be a period of stringent belt-tightening and already meagerly supplied Zaire, a figure like Mr. Gizenga, given sanctuary by a neighboring state could stir opposition.

Finally, there is Zaire's dependence on the Benguela Railroad, which runs from the copper fields of Zaire to the Angolan port of Benguela on the Atlantic. While Angola could expect to profit by transit fees from the road, the country is not as economically dependent on it as are Zaire and Zambia.

With copper prices beginning to rise, Zaire would like to have the railroad opened as soon as possible.

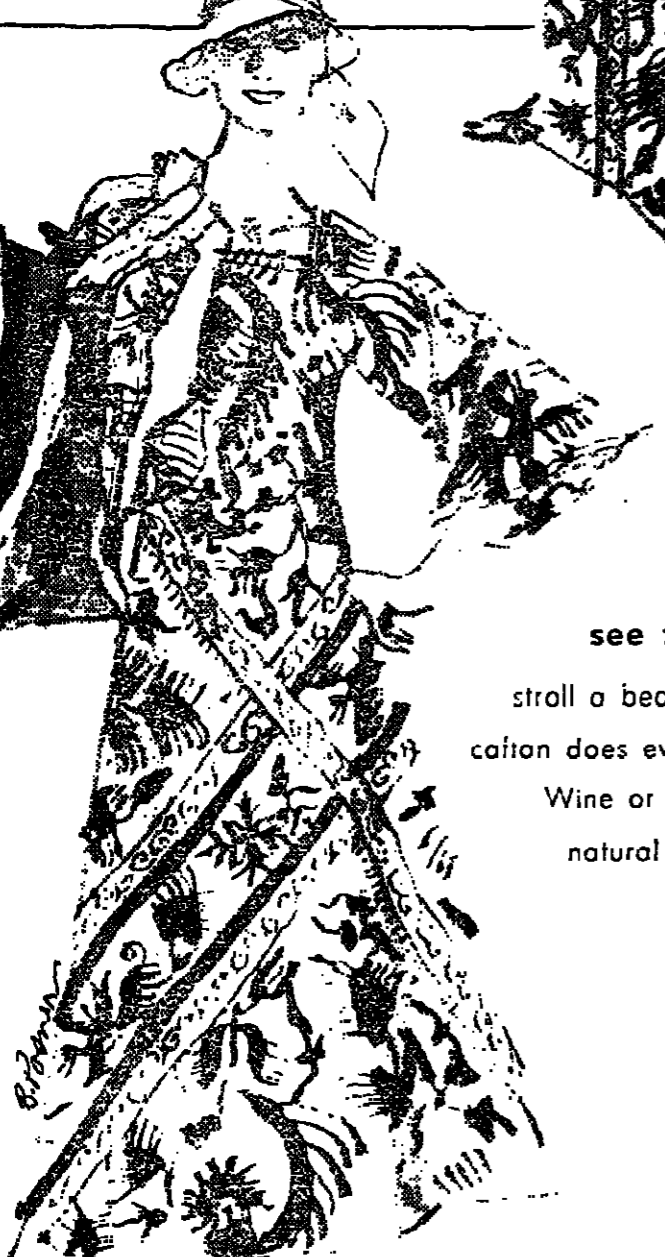

As a further indication of the turnaround made by Mr. Mobutu, he met two weeks ago with the ambassadors of the Soviet Union, Cuba and other Warsaw Pact countries. The President, who has always been outspokenly antagonistic to the Soviet bloc, rescinded an order that had confined the movements of these diplomats to downtown Kinshasa. Attacks on the Soviet Union first by the Portuguese and later by the state-owned press have also abated in tone and lessened in frequency.

Botswana Nervous About the News From Neighboring Rhodesia

BY HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

GABORONE, Botswana, March 18—Gaborone is a pleasant little town that affords transit passengers on flights between South Africa and Zambia the rare sensation of being somewhere without knowing what country they are in. Few passengers get off and stay.

Botswana, of which this is the capital, would like to continue to keep itself out of the news but doubts that it can for much longer. The news is too nearby and is beginning to spill over the borders of Botswana, which does not have an army.

There have been incursions by both of black guerrillas and Rhodesian forces searching for the guerrillas. And the triumph in Angola of forces dedicated to the liberation of South-West Africa, or Namibia as many call it, has heightened the possibility of guerrilla warfare in neighboring South-West Africa.

The New York Times/March 23, 1976

Geography Not Kind

Botswana has not been blessed by geography. As if by magic, it is isolated and landlocked and that much of its Texas-sized area is desert. It is also entirely surrounded by white-ruled Africa, except for a ferry crossing to Zambia in the northeast.

Its only ports of entry are in South Africa, its only means of conveying the goods it imports and exports is the Rhodesia railroad. The railroad that Cecil Rhodes built in the heyday of empire to link the extreme reaches of his colonization to Cape Town and the sea runs through Botswana, which was then Bechuanaland.

It is a vital communications link for Rhodesia's trade, particularly now, when Mozambique's closing of its border has left Rhodesia with only and—a Government that is remarkably forthright and unpretentious—awkward situation of feeling as strongly about apartheid and white minority rule as the rest of black Africa but of depending completely on those whose ways of government it despises.

Botswana's only direct link to black Africa is in its extreme northeast corner, where South-West Africa, Rhodesia and Zambia meet with Botswana on the Zambezi River. But Botswana's total of 50 miles of paved road does not yet reach to the river ferry.

Ties Still Necessary

So while Botswana sincerely joins condemnations by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity of Rhodesian minority rule, South African apartheid and South Africa's refusal to free the territory of South-West Africa, in action it remains linked to the countries it does not recognize.

Gaborone remains a relaxed, multiracial town in which the Prime Minister sets the example. His marriage in the 1940's to an Englishwoman barred him from returning to the then British protectorate for six years, largely for fear of offending segregated South Africa. Now this is forgotten and the couple's sons are a familiar sight around town—one followed his parent's small motorcade from the tiny airport on his motorcycle today.

But despite the free and easy air, by African standards, in the unostentatious government buildings, officials are worried that Sir Seretse's tightrope act between black and white pressures is becoming increasingly difficult as those pressures mount.

"It would be too optimistic to hope that Rhodesia's problems can still be settled peacefully," the high official said, "and too much to hope that Botswana can escape the war."

The rail line is essential not only for Botswana's imports and exports, but is in an even wider sense the country's lifeline, as a trip here from the Rhodesian border proved. Most of the population centers of this sparsely populated country lie along the line, and the arrival of the train, even after midnight, is an event that brings many people just to see it arrive and leave and chat with passengers.

The railroad is owned and operated by Rhodesia, which pays Botswana for the right of way and transit fees. It also transports Botswana's exports of beef, copper and nickel concentrates and its imports of almost everything its 700,000 people need, including much of their food, from South Africa and Rhodesia.

Mr. Kodama was reported to have been on the second floor of his home when the plane struck, but to have escaped to the first floor. Firemen had the blaze under control in 20 minutes.

Ever since Mr. Kodama's involvement in Lockheed's scandal became known in early February, there have been rumors of threats on his life and demonstrations calling for his imprisonment.

Bleak Report Has Fleet Street at Odds

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, March 22—A bleak report on British newspapers, which urges sharp manpower cuts and at least $190 million in loans to the ailing industry, has triggered a controversy on Fleet Street and raised questions about the future of a number of publications.

Beyond this, the report last week of the Royal Commission on the Press has stirred debate about Fleet Street's "inflexibility" in the midst of a financial crisis caused by declining readership, rising newspaper costs and lagging advertising revenue.

"We are, I think, in a watershed year," said Prof. O. R. McGregor, chairman of the royal commission, which was set up last summer to advise the Government on ways of dealing with the newspaper situation. "If cooperation fails," he said, referring to union-management relations, "and we go back to the sterile experience of earlier years, then we face the risk of replicating what happened in New York—a grim reminder."

Most Lose Money
He said that New York daily newspapers had been reduced from eight to three in a decade, and the experience could not be ignored in Britain, where there are eight national dailies, seven Sunday papers, and two London evening papers. "Most titles are operating at a loss, and only a few publishers, mainly of popular papers, are in a comfortable position," said the report.

The commission's analysis and proposals have stirred unease within the newspaper industry. The report supports the reduction of 7,000 out of 20,000 regular production jobs in London and Manchester—the national newspaper centers—and quotes the estimate of publishers that the cost of severance payments would be $60 million to $70 million, and new print technology would require an additional $40 million.

To meet this, the commission urges loans, preferably from the private sector, costing at least $100 million dollars. All loans, it is proposed, should receive a limited amount of interest relief from the Government.

Although the analysis by the 14-member commission contained few surprises, some of its data and conclusions evoked strong reactions among printers and journalists.

A Key Criticism

One key criticism was that the commission failed to take into account the nature of each newspaper. "Newspapers are not cans of beans—each has its own approach, its own audience, its own appearance, its own personality, and its cycle of birth, maturity and change."

said Peter Wilsher, business news editor of The Sunday Times.

"Fleet Street's real difficulty is inflexibility in the face of change," he said. "There is no earthly reason why a paper, which, under a particular editor and proprietor, once happily sold four million copies a day to its affluent, ambitious, materialistic, middle-class readers, should still be selling the same to their worried, anarchic, TV-watching, commune-living children 20 or 30 years later."

"Yet because it is still locked into the capital investment, the distribution pattern, the page size, the readership profile and the manning schedules that proved so appropriate and profitable three decades back, it is virtually impossible to avoid losses today. For some in that position—and there are several—all that 'the new technology' can do is to put off the evil day."

Debate Over Salaries
The sensitivity on Fleet Street to the report was underlined last week when printers on The Financial Times took the unusual step of refusing to set edited copy about the report, thereby preventing the appearance of the newspaper on Thursday. They were protesting a decision by an editor to delete a sentence about journalists' salaries while passing for publication a sentence about printers' salaries. The action raised crucial questions about press freedoms and the muscle of unions, but, surprisingly, there was little comment by other newspapers, feared further reaction from partly because publishers unions.

Moreover, the issue itself was promptly overshadowed by a debate over how much money journalists and printers earned. The report said that some members of the National Graphical Association, the craft union, earn as much as $25,000. The printers did not dispute this, but refused to set the article saying this unless another finding of the committee that senior journalists on an unidentified paper earned an average of $40,000 a year was included.

The report implied that 55 people fell into this category, although the average earnings for this group as a whole were about $720 a week. When The Financial Times resumed publication on Friday, it said that the editor had deleted the figure on journalists' pay because it "appeared to be either positively wrong or computed on a basis which in the context gave a totally misleading impression."

Later the commission conceded that the figure of $720 a week did not relate to all senior journalists but "to a very small group of people." The commission said if the average were recalculated for all senior editorial people, the figure would be $480 a week.

Beirut Rightists Counterattack in Drive to Regain the Battered Holiday Inn

Rashid Karami met with President Suleiman Franjeh, who was holed up in his palace at Baabda, east of this capital, continuing to refuse both military and civilian demands that he resign. An emergency Cabinet meeting followed at which a procedure for the President's departure was agreed upon. Whether Mr. Franjeh would go along was not clear.

The six-member Cabinet agreed to a proposed amendment to the Constitution that would permit Parliament to elect immediately a successor to President Franjeh, a Maronite Christian, whose six-year mandate does not expire until Sept. 23.

The proposal, which would amend a section that limits a presidential election by Parliament to one or two months before the end of a term, no goes to the 99-member body.

Proposal for Amnesty

The Cabinet also considered and sent back to Parliament for final revision, a proposal for a general amnesty for the soldiers who in the last few months have deserted the 18,000-man Lebanese Army.

These soldiers had formed the so-called Lebanese Arab Army to back protests against a Syrian-sponsored formula for ending the Lebanese civil war, which began last April and which halted for a time with the cease-fire of Jan. 22. The settlement formula gave Lebanon's Moslem majority a greater share in the political power held by the Christian minority, but, according to the protesters, not enough.

Embassies Issue Protests

Brig. Gen. Abdel-Aziz al-Ahdab, a Moslem who commands the Beirut garrison, then proclaimed himself provisional military governor of Lebanon and demanded that President Franjeh resign. Two-thirds of Parliament later supported the demand, but Mr. Franjeh refused.

As shells fell into various Beirut areas through the day and last night, a number of foreign missions situated in the western neighborhoods of Beirut issued protests, but the Government who was powerless.

A French diplomat, Guy Barjolot, was seriously wounded when a shell landed in the French Embassy compound near the Holiday Inn. Another French diplomat, André Ringard, was slightly wounded.

Last night, jeeps with loudspeakers warned people to move out of the upper stories of their apartment buildings.

"Please, please, Mommy," implored a 10-year-old girl in the well-to-do Manara section, "let's get out of here."

Heavy artillery shells, fired from once-placid hill resorts east of the capital, whined and thumped in the western quarters of the capital, driving many people into their basements.

Howitzers Fire on City

Howitzers firing from the hills of a Christian redoubt repeatedly struck the arteries used by the leftist gunmen to reinforce the hotel front. One road runs along the sea past the American Embassy, another descends past the radio station held by anti-Franjeh forces.

Yesterday morning, as the Phalangist counteroffensive appeared to peak, 155-millimeter shells whined over the Manara section of the capital and crashed into positions of the breakaway Lebanese Arab Army and the seaside officers' club, which has been turned into a military headquarters.

Three cars, a small artillery piece and two armored vehicles were hit, but soldiers at the officers' club reported that only one of their number had been wounded in the shelling.

Glass from an artillery explosion splattered the car of an American correspondent who drove out of the line of fire, which arched over some of Beirut's most expensive high-rise apartment buildings.

As other explosions thudded nearby, the correspondent turned the corner and found 30 gunmen firing wildly in the air. Two heavy machine guns mounted on Land-Rovers joined the fusilade. As the city shook, a funeral for a slain leftist was taking place.

No Casualty Figures

There were no official figures on the number of people killed in the fiercest night of shelling in the civil war, but a brief tour of the once-fashionable shopping area found cars struck by artillery and glass strewn on the streets.

Two explosions rocked the offices of the newspaper Al-Naba, where the officers of United Press International are situated, and a mortar round knocked out the communications of the Reuters news agency in the nearby Kantari section. Shells landed near the radio station controlled by forces loyal to General Ahdab, the Beirut garrison commander.

The Phalangist counteroffensive appeared to have blunted the drive by the leftist coalition.

According to some accounts, Phalangist gunmen wearing the uniforms of the Palestinian military police managed to infiltrate the Holiday Inn, which Sunday night was the scene of jubilant chaos. Other accounts said that after taking the hotel, the coalition of leftist gunmen failed to flush out all their opponents and some remained in hiding until their comrades once again assaulted the hotel, which has been an emotional symbol for both sides.

Reports from the mountains above Mr. Franjeh's residence said that partisans of the leftist leader, Kamal Jumblat, had continued to shell the fortified Christian town of Kahale, but it did not seem that the town was in danger of falling.

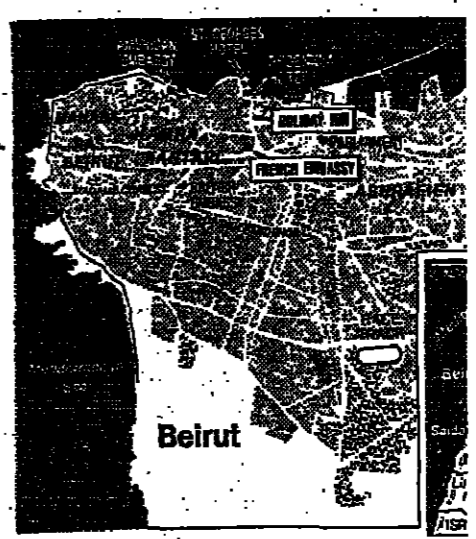

Hours after the capture of the Holiday Inn Sunday night, General Ahdab issued a communiqué declaring the formation of a military command council "to unify efforts for military action and for coordinating anticipated military operations if a political solution does not succeed."

But there was no clear sign yesterday that the command council — which Mr. Jumblat was expected to join informally — had altered the military situation here.

In the southern Lebanese town of Nabatiye, troops from the Lebanese Arab Army were reported to have set up roadblocks to halt reinforcement from the Syrian-supported As Saïqa Palestinian movement. Saïqa guerrillas continue to straddle a key crossroads just south of the Beirut airport, blocking an armored column of the Lebanese Arab Army, which had been moving toward Baabda.

Middle East Airlines continued to fly in and out of Beirut and many Lebanese and foreign designers fled the country by air.

Moslem and Christian gunmen battled in Beirut. Shell wounded two diplomats at Holiday Inn.

Are you still smoking It

In the years since the criticism against smoking first appeared, many people have given up cigarettes. But many more people have not. And that's who we'd like to talk to. That even larger group of people who are still smoking today.

If you're still a smoker, you've probably heard the charges leveled against 'tar' and nicotine. You may have become concerned. And chances are you even tried to do something about it. Like trying several of those empty-tasting low 'tar' and nicotine cigarettes.

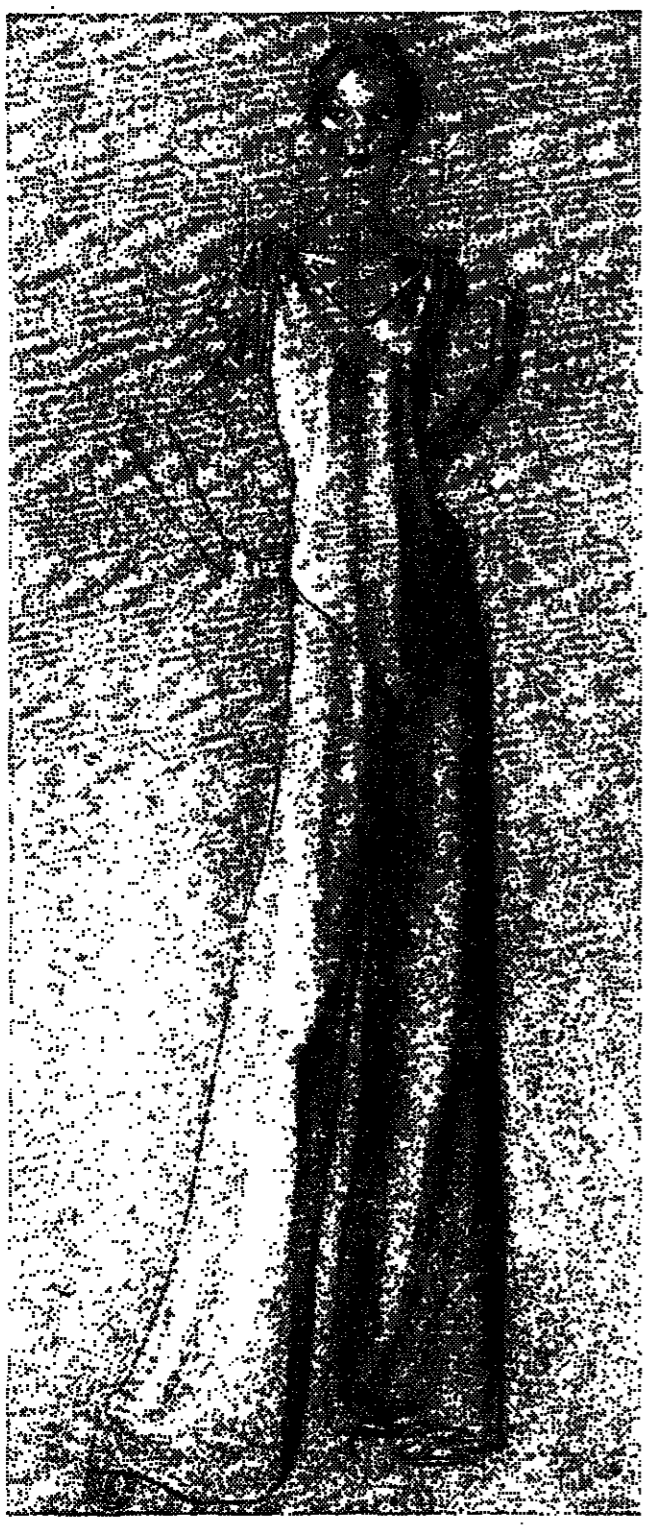

If you're like a lot of other smokers, you probably went right back to your old brand, and concluded that a good-tasting low 'tar' and nicotine cigarette has never been invented.

Well, if that's the case, you haven't tried Vantage. Vantage cuts down substantially on the 'tar' and nicotine you may have become concerned about. Without cutting out that satisfying tobacco flavor you've come to appreciate.

Now Vantage isn't the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you can smoke. But it may well be the lowest you'll enjoy.

To put it simply, Vantage still tastes like a real cigarette.

So, if you still smoke, but would like to cut down on 'tar' and nicotine, Vantage is one cigarette you should seriously consider.

America has only one trans world airline. It's Pan Am.

There are several U.S. airlines that can fly you somewhere out of the country.

But only Pan Am can fly you everywhere out of the country. To six continents, 61 countries, 91 cities.

Which should make things easy for you. Not only in choosing your airline, but in putting your trip together. And enjoying it.

If Europe's your pleasure this spring, we'll be the only U.S. airline flying only big, comfortable 747's to Europe.

If you're going to be crossing the wide Pacific, we'll have nothing but comfort for you there, too. Every flight will be a 747. Again, we'll be the only U.S. airline doing it.

In fact, on certain routes to the Orient we'll be flying the new 747 SP.

For the first time in history, you'll be able to fly from New York and Los Angeles to Tokyo, nonstop.

Going South? Way south to Latin America? We have more flights to more places in Latin America than any other airline.

And if you've really got it made, we're the one U.S. airline that can fly you all the way around the world. From either direction. Any day of the week. And on a trip like that you can rest assured it'll be by 747.

At Pan Am, you don't pay a penny extra for having the world at your fingertips. Or for having the world's largest fleet of 747's at your beck and call.

And speaking of calling, why not call your travel agent for everything. He'll work it all out with you. And most likely that won't cost you a penny extra either.

Syria Reported Confident Of Truce in Lebanon Soon

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

DAMASCUS, Syria, March 22—Syrian mediators are confident that a new cease-fire in Lebanon may be achieved within two or three days, informed sources said here tonight.

These sources indicated that the Lebanese factions were moving toward agreement on a legal device permitting the election of a new president almost immediately by Parliament, thus clearing the way for President Suleiman Franjeh's resignation.

The military officers and civilian leaders of the Alliance of Moslems and Leftists are demanding his departure. It is regarded as a key condition, without which the fighting cannot be stopped.

Ouster Prevented by Syria
Syria has prevented Mr. Franjeh's ouster by force but is understood to be seeking a legal way to permit his leaving office.

President Hafez al-Assad and his aides continue to mediate under immense pressure. Much of the new power and prestige that Syria has gained in the Arab world is tied to Lebanon.

With the new eruption of the civil war, many diplomats here feel the Syrians are neither end their active involvement in Lebanon nor launch a full-scale military intervention.

A withdrawal from Lebanon would mean among other things the end of President Assad's ambitious effort to establish a cohesive military and political front against Israel reaching from the southern tip of Jordan to the Mediterranean coast of Lebanon.

As for military intervention, Syrian officials say this will not happen, and foreign diplomats here are inclined to believe them. The diplomats cite as a reason the Syrians' expectation that Israel would react by attacking Syria, not only through Lebanon but also on the Golan Heights, with air strikes against the Syrian interior.

Syrians Show Frustration
Syrian frustrations over Lebanon come through clearly in conversations here. Officials now speak privately with great bitterness, and sometimes contempt, of virtually all the Lebanese leaders, left, right, Moslem and Christian.

It has become clear that Syria has no favorite Lebanese personality on whom it can rely for the implementation of its policies.

The Syrians speak with special bitterness of Brig. Gen. Aziz al-Ahdab, the leader of an attempted coup 10 days ago. They

WEST BANK VICTIM DIES IN A HOSPITAL

Arab Boy Was Shot During Protests Last Week

Special to The New York Times

TEL AVIV, March 22—An 11-year-old Arab boy who was shot last Wednesday as Israeli soldiers sought to disperse demonstrators in the occupied West Bank died today in a Jerusalem hospital.

His death, which appeared to heighten tension in the occupied area, came on a day marked by new disturbances and by the beginning of debate on the West Bank situation at the United Nations Security Council in New York.

Israeli occupation troops clashed with demonstrators during the day at Tulkarim, and 10 Arabs were injured. A 45-year-old man was reportedly stricken with a heart attack during the incident and died later in a hospital.

In Salfit, north of Ramallah, 20 demonstrators were arrested, and a series of rock-throwing and fire-burning incidents were reported elsewhere in the West Bank.

All Hassan Afana, the boy who died in Jerusalem, had suffered a head wound during the incident of last Wednesday.

Israeli authorities are holding an off-duty soldier who is believed to have fired into the crowd of demonstrators as it was closing in on an Israeli car carrying four other soldiers. The man now under arrest was in a pickup truck that came upon the scene, on the Jerusalem-Jericho road.

Mayor to Stay On
In a development that Israelis hoped would help to ease tensions in the West Bank, the Arab who resigned as Mayor of Hebron Saturday, after Israeli troops forced their way into the city hall to break up a disturbance, announced today that he would remain in office until the municipal elections scheduled for April 12.

The Mayor, 71-year-old Sheik Mohammed Ali Jabari, a strong leader of the Hebron hills region for four decades, withdrew his resignation after occupation authorities lifted the curfew imposed on the nearby village of Halhoul.

Mayor Jabari, one of nine Arab mayors of West Bank communities to resign in the last two weeks, had forwarded to the Judea and Samaria military command an appeal from local dignitaries for the lifting of the curfew.

In addition, Israel's Defense Ministry had announced that forces would be withdrawn from the main streets of Hebron in response to a request by Mayor Jabari, who had promised to work to restore calm. The announcement followed a

A Heavy Vote in Cambodia For New Assembly Is Reported

Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, March 22—About 98 percent of Cambodia's eligible voters cast ballots in elections for a 250-member National Assembly, over the weekend, the Phnom Penh radio reported this morning.

The official list of those elected was read during the broadcast by the information minister, Hu Nim.

Only 50 members of the Cambodian Army were represented among those elected, as expected. It appeared that a number of prewar industries, particularly the nation's rich rubber plantations, had resumed operations listed for the successful candidates.

There were 515 candidates for the 250 seats in the first National Assembly elected under the Communists.

Only 46 women were listed as members of the new Parliament, including nine from the army contingent.

Mr. Nim also put the population of Cambodia at 7,735,279, which indicates 15 percent increase over the latest figures of the prewar regime of President Lon Nol.

He said that about 2.8 million were "eligible voters; that is, more than 18 years of age." If this population figure is correct, it would counter charges that widespread killings and deaths from other causes occurred after the takeover last April by Cambodian Communists. But Western diplomats here said that there was no way to determine the accuracy of these figures.

The elected members of the new Assembly were said to include 50 factory workers, 50 army members and the balance "peasants."

Listed among the factory workers were eight rubber-industry workers, two saw-works workers, one fishing-industry worker, and three each from the railways and the energy sectors.

Intellectuals associated with the views of the P.L.O. The West Bank disturbances, which turned into protests against the occupation, followed a ruling by an Israeli magistrate Jan. 29 freeing eight Jews charged with praying illegally on Temple Mount, a site in the Old City of Jerusalem holy to both Moslems and Jews.

Government regulations had forbidden Jews to hold services in the area to avoid arousing Arab protests. The Israeli Supreme Court yesterday upheld the right of the police to ban Jewish prayers on Temple Mount.

ITALY'S TOP PARTY DIVIDED ON REDS

Christian Democrat Leader Is Challenged for Post by Defense Minister

By ALVIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times

ROME, March 22—For five days now, the Christian Democrats have been applauding, booing and sometimes scuffling, finding time for three-hour lunches and struggling all the while at their congress to find a way to maintain their political dominance.

They have run into trouble and have split virtually down the middle on just how to deal with the Communists, Italy's second largest party. And, today, they found themselves divided further by a bid for the party's leadership by Arnaldo Forlani, the 50-year-old Defense Minister, who is opposed to moving too far and too fast toward the Communist Party.

It was not an open and direct challenge but it was direct between the lines by all of more than 700 delegates. In effect, Mr. Forlani said he was the man to lead the party now and not Benigno Zaccagnini, the 63-year-old pediatrician who took over the post last July and pledged himself to reform.

Mr. Zaccagnini, the reluctant leader who assumed the job as a compromise candidate and then decided to try to keep it, sat impassively as Mr. Forlani brought cheering delegates to their feet during a 90-minute speech. At times, Mr. Zaccagnini whispered in the ear of Prime Minister Aldo Moro, one of his allies.

The leadership issue, among others, has introduced an element of suspense in the party's congress, one of the most crucial in years. Elections are scheduled for next year and the Christian Democrats, who have governed for more than 30 years, could well emerge from the voting with fewer votes than the Communists.

So the congress has taken on special significance, particularly against the background of economic and monetary crisis and bribery allegations arising from the Lockheed scandal. And a major question before the delegates is the stance to adopt against the Communists.

Both the present leader and the challenger are opposed to the so-called historical compromise, the effort by the Communists to enter government and share power in a coalition with non-Communist parties. But they appear to differ on how to deal with the Communists now and in a way that would keep them from power.

Mr. Zaccagnini embraces the idea of "consensus" politics, that is, that the Communists should be asked to provide support for specific measures in times of crisis. In his view, the Communists represent a

William W. Scranton, the new chief representative of the United States, casting his first vote in the Security Council yesterday. The vote, against seating the Palestine Liberation Organization for debate, did not have the force of a veto since it was on a procedural matter.

Israel and P.L.O. Clash in U.N. I

By PAUL HOFMANN
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., March 22—Representatives of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization clashed in debate before the Security Council today as the Council began discussing anti-Israeli unrest in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

The clash came after the Council had voted, over United States objections, to allow the P.L.O. to participate in the session with the same rights as any United Nations member country whose interests are affected.

The 15-nation Council overruled the objection by a vote of 11 to 1 with 3 abstentions. The lone dissenting vote—not a veto because it came on a procedural matter—was cast by the new delegate of the United States, William W. Scranton, in his first appearance since his appointment.

As the debate began, the acting observer of the P.L.O. at the United Nations, Zehdi Labib Terzi, accused Israel of "Hitlerite atrocities" in the occupied territories and likened the wave of demonstrations to "the glorious Warsaw ghetto uprising" against the Nazis in World War II. Delegates of a number of Arab countries backed him.

Israel's chief delegate, Chaim Herzog, dismissed the Arab charges as lies and said the demonstrations in the West Bank were undertaken by youths incited by what he denounced as false propaganda. The bulk of the West Bank population, he said, has not been involved.

Mr. Herzog called the attention of the council to the current "tragedy of horrifying proportions" in Lebanon.

Mr. Terzi then raised a point of order, demanding that Mr. Herzog stick to the situation in his own country.

Britain's delegate, Ivor Richard, also on a point of order, pointed out that the council had already heard a series of speakers hostile to Israel. "The Israeli delegation is entitled to have its say," he declared.

The council president, Thomas S. Boya of Benin, ended the clash by asking the Israeli delegate to continue his statement.

This was the first time that Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization had faced each other in the Security Council.

Israel had boycotted the Council sessions in December and January on the ground that the P.L.O., which it denounced as an organization bent on Israel's destruction, was admitted. The P.L.O. attended its first session in December.

The Israeli Government decided last Friday to present its case before the Council during a debate on the situation in Jerusalem and the West Bank that had been requested by the two Moslem members—Libya and Pakistan.

The anti-Israeli demonstrations in the occupied territories of the last few weeks were touched off by a ruling of an Israeli magistrate that it was not unlawful for Jews to pray on Temple Mount in the Old City of Jerusalem, the site of two Islamic shrines and the ruins of King Solomon's temple.

Israeli policemen had banned Jewish prayers there to avoid protests from Moslems, and the ban was upheld by the Israeli Supreme Court yesterday.

For the current debate, the Security Council admitted as nonvoting participants Egypt, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yugoslavia, as well as Israel and the P.L.O.

The three countries abstaining in the 11 to 1 vote on admitting the P.L.O. were Britain, France and Italy. Another European member of the council, Sweden, voted with the majority, composed of Communist and third-world countries.

Before the vote, Mr. Scranton declared that the United States would not have opposed participation of the P.L.O. under Rule 39 of the Council's procedural rules. This provision says that the Security Council may invite members of the United Nations Secretariat "or other persons whom it considers competent for the purpose," to supply it with information on matters under consideration.

However, the American delegate said, the United States rejected P.L.O. attendance at the meeting under Rule 37, which provides that any member of the United Nations that is not a member of the Security Council may be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion of an issue affecting its interests.

The American representative, a former Governor of Pennsylvania, remarked in today's statement that the United States stand on P.L.O. participation in Council debates was based on principle, "a principle that cannot be eroded either by its continuing violation no matter how many times, or by time itself." Referring to his own debut in the Council de-reality in Italy and should be brought into a dialogue on curing the nation's ills.

In contrast, Mr. Forlani believes that the Christian Democrats have to develop their own clear-cut policy and keep the party's congress itself. The pro-Zaccagnini delegates are in favor of continuing with the present system of selection by the party's national council.

The powers at the Congress—and there are many—will now huddle to decide what to do. Mr. Forlani may well settle for some sort of a compromise that would leave the present leader in place.

If his supporters push through the change to elect the party leader directly, however, then he would undoubtedly carry on with his bid and probably win.

Nothing is ever quite clear among the Christian Democrats and, at this party congress, things are more unclear than usual.

There is the determination to moving toward a formula that would establish firm relations with the Communist Party even outside the Cabinet.

"Differences between the two men clearly exist," a diplomat remarked. "But it all seems to boil down to a matter of degree and emphasis."

The next key question of the congress is how to deal with the issue of the party leadership. The pro-Forlani forces are backing a proposal to elect the leader directly by the congress itself. YOU SHOP AROUND FOR A CAR WHY NOT SHOP AROUND FOR LIFE INSURANCE?

Shop around for a car and you probably know that you can pay $5000 at one dealer. $200 less at the next. and $100 less than that at the third.

On exactly the same car. But what you may not know is that it's just the same with life insurance.

You can save surprising amounts of money on virtually the same protection, if you shop around.

And if you do, do you know where you'll probably end up?

At the place where you might expect to save money.

SAVINGS BANK LIFE INSURANCE CAN SAVE YOU MONEY

SBLI is low cost because we sell direct, either in banks or by mail.

To get an idea of how low, look at the chart:

Age	$30,000 5 Year Renewable Term
	Annual Premium	Quarterly Premium	Monthly Premium
20	$ 84.00	$21.90	$ 7.50
25	88.50	23.10	8.10
30	96.30	24.90	8.70
35	114.00	29.70	10.20
40	155.40	40.50	14.10

And when you include SBLI dividends, which are paid annually as earned, the cost becomes, even less.

It's hard to find prices as reasonable as these anywhere else.

And SBLI rates are just as competitive on all the other kinds of insurance we sell, such as straight life, endowment policies, decreasing term, etc.

SBLI IS THE SIXTH LARGEST SELLER OF INSURANCE IN N.Y. STATE

With prices like this, it's hardly surprising that SBLI has grown dramatically year by year.

Today, only five companies sell more life insurance in New York State than we do. And we're catching up on them.

TALK TO THE SBLI SPECIALISTS

Although you can buy SBLI only in savings banks, don't get the idea that the person you'll talk to will be just any bank employee.

All the people you'll talk to are SBLI specialists.

They've had to pass the same N.Y. state examination as the sales people employed by any other insurance company. In fact, many of them have come to us from our competitors.

GET THE FACTS... AT A SAVINGS BANK

To get the whole story on SBLI, visit a savings bank and talk to the SBLI specialists.

They'll be happy to give you complete details, with SBLI's rates and the right plan to fit your needs.

They'll also give you a free copy of the "Consumer's Guide to Low Cost SBLI".

This book lists rates on all plans. Armed with this, you can, if you compare them with other insurance companies' prices.

In other words, you can shop it. After all, you do it for everything else big.

So why not shop around for life insurance?

municipal building official warned that about 14,000 un-reinforced masonry buildings in the city did not meet the most up-to-date earthquake-reinforcement standards and would be severely battered by a major earthquake. More than 75,000 people, many of them poor, live in these structures, according to the official, Robert Williams.
 He urged enactment of a proposed city ordinance that would require unsafe buildings to be torn down, but he forecast strong opposition from the owners of such properties.
 Last Wednesday, Dr. Vincent
 E. McKelvey, director of the Geological Survey, flew to Sacramento to brief senior state officials about the bulge.

 According to officials who were present, he stressed that it might or might not be a precursor of an earthquake, emphasizing that too little was known about the phenomenon.
 But he advised them to give consideration to the possibility that it could forewarn of a major disaster.
 "We're regarding this as a good deal more significant than a scientific curiosity," said H.
 Roger Pulley, an earthquake specialist in the state's Office of Emergency Services.
 The state, he said, regards the bulge as "something of a threat, but accompanied by a great deal of scientific uncertainty; we don't know what it means."

 Nevertheless, he said, his department would use discovery of the phenomenon as an opportunity to accelerate efforts to get local governments to upgrade planning for a serious disaster and to upgrade building codes where necessary, and to urge the public to give some thought to the possibility of a major earthquake.
 "We're going to use the Palmdale Bulge as a way to get the people's attention," he said. "We've talked about the problem; now you've got something, a two-by-four, to hit them between the eyes—that you'd better pay attention and listen."

 Despite the recent new uneasiness, no one had predicted that a major earthquake is imminent. The researchers apparently are hoping that nature will not release the enormous energy accumulated deep in-the earth until they have learned how to predict, with some accuracy, when, where and with what intensity an earthquake will occur.
 For the most part, researchers studying the fault said they have not discovered any clues other than the bulge itself, suggesting that an earthquake is not on the fault, although

Many Clinical Labs Fail In Drug Identifying Tests

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 22—It is the chance that the answer to a physician receives from a lab will be the correct one? At Senate hearings last fall, Senator Javits posed that question to the nation's chief health officer, Dr. Theodore Cooper, Assistant Secretary for Health in the H.E.W. Department.

"In preparing for this testimony, I asked the staff the same question," Dr. Cooper replied, "and I will give you the answer I got: 'It is very difficult to say' is the answer."

"That's a very decisive answer," Mr. Javits shot back. The Center for Disease Control estimates that of the 14,354 clinical labs in the United States—half are in hospitals and half outside.

Those participating in the Medicare program have to meet certain Federal standards, but these are enforced unevenly. The center licenses the 900 or so independent labs that engage in interstate commerce, and in various fields such as bacteriology or clinical chemistry, labs that want to participate in such programs.

No Standards
About 4,000 labs do not have to meet any standards, the center estimates, nor do the 30,000 to 50,000 laboratories in physicians' offices, which could come under some control under the pending legislation.

The test results measure the work of only 6 to 8 percent of all laboratories and represent "the best work that the best labs can do," Dr. Lamotte of the center said.

The Atlanta center sends to labs up to four times a year packets of tests, which they must process and identify. If they do not make the grade they can lose their license in any areas when they cannot show good enough results.

In addition, the center's field inspectors make an unannounced, on-site visit each year and make the labs perform, under supervision, the same tests that it gets in the mail. The Medicare program, however, does not allow for unannounced visits.

Better by Mail
"It is interesting to note that in clinical chemistry many labs with unsatisfactory results at on-site examinations scored much better—30 to 60 percent—when they received identical specimens in the mail or by messenger and tests unhampered by the presence of an inspector," said Dr. Morris Schaeffer, the former general director of the laboratory division of the New York City Department of Health.

In 1967, Congress passed the Clinical Laboratory Improvement Act and tried to encourage states to set up screening programs using Federal standards.

Nine years after that law was passed, only New York State, whose 1965 law served as a model for the Federal legislation in the first place, is qualified to license labs. The Federal Government spots checks the state program, run by Dr. William Kaufman and widely acknowledged as the best in the country.

New York City's laboratory division makes semiannual visits to the city's labs under the state program.

Other states such as New Jersey, Pennsylvania, California, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan are believed to have good but incomplete programs. Twenty-eight states have done nothing at all.

Lead Shot Will Be Banned For Hunting Use on Flyway
WASHINGTON, March 22 (UPI)—Secretary of the Interior Thomas S. Kleppe has decided to bar waterfowl hunters from using lead shot, which may poison nearly 2 million ducks a year, this fall in designated areas of the Atlantic Flyway, it was announced today.

The ban on traditional lead shot will be expanded to selected areas in the Mississippi Flyway in 1977 the Central and Pacific Flyways in 1978, the Interior Department said. Steel shot, which is lighter in weight, is the only available substitute.

The National Wildlife Federation originally requested the change because spent lead shot has accumulated in some wetland areas that are annually hunted, and aquatic birds that ingest the shot are poisoned.

Quebec Teachers Walk Out
MONTREAL, March 22 (AP)—Thousands of Quebec teachers and public-service workers staged a one-day walkout today, closing schools across the province and leaving many hospitals to operate with a minimum of support staff.

Cancer Patients Relieved by Placebos
CHICAGO, March 22 (AP)—Pills containing no active ingredients brought pain relief for a large percentage of cancer patients, particularly among very self-sufficient persons, a Mayo Clinic study shows.

The study demonstrated that there can be a psychological element in pain relief in cancer, as has been shown in other diseases in experiments using inactive pills, known as placebos.

Researchers at the Rochester, Minn., institution studied the effects on 288 cancer patients of orally administered pain relievers and placebos made of milk sugar. The patients did not know whether they were receiving pain relievers or placebos.

The researchers reported in the February issue of Mayo Clinic Proceedings, a medical journal, that 112 of the 288 patients, or 39 percent, reported, after being given placebos that they had received 50 percent or greater relief of pain. The patients who said they received less than 50 percent relief after taking the placebos had a greater response to the active drugs and more instances of central nervous system side effects to the placebo, such as dizziness, sedation and impaired thinking.

Both the drug and placebo were given in identical capsules on the same schedule. The patients were asked to record the degree of relief they obtained and any side effects they experienced.

The study was done by Dr. Charles G. Moertel, a Mayo gastroenterologist and internist, with two statisticians, Dr. William F. Taylor of Mayo and Dr. Arthur Roth of Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh.

To please, he may in fact be the patient who has the greatest need for the supportive efforts of the physician," they added.

Resident Doctors Also Held to Be Students Without Rights of Employees

WASHINGTON, March 22 (AP)—The National Labor Relations Board delivered a crippling blow to the budding union movement among young doctors today by ruling that interns and residents were not entitled to organize or strike under the umbrella of Federal law.

In a precedent-setting 4-to-2 decision, the board ruled that interns and residents were students, not hospital employees eligible to be represented by a union for collective bargaining.

The board dismissed petitions for representation elections among the house staffs at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center of Los Angeles and St. Christopher's Hospital for Children in Philadelphia.

The petitions were filed by locals of the Physician's National Housestaff Association, an organization representing nearly one-third of the country's 60,000 interns and residents.

Its president, Dr. Robert G. Harmon of Elkridge, Md., called the decision "Ford-style union busting" and threatened possible job actions.

Exploitation Is Feared
"By cynically classifying them as students, the N.L.R.B. has given hospitals official approval to continue to exploit young doctors by using their medical skills, then paying them like orderlies," Dr. Harmon said. "The Administration-backed N.L.R.B. has publicly affirmed that the profits of hospital employers are more important than the welfare of workers or the sick."

The doctors could appeal to the Federal courts, but Dr. Harmon indicated that this was not likely. N.L.R.B. appeals in the courts have not been an "effective mechanism," he said in an interview.

Dr. Harmon's association, founded in 1972, has led a number of strikes at hospitals in New York City, Chicago and Los Angeles, emphasizing both better working conditions and improved patient care.

Even without N.L.R.B. recognition the doctors could still strike, as they have in the past, but without protection of Federal law.

Medical educators, grouped in the Association of American Medical Colleges, have opposed the new union's organizing efforts, warning that the demands of interns and residents would put further upward pressure on hospital rates.

Tradition Seen Upheld
In a statement, the college association's President, Dr. John A. D. Cooper, said that the N.L.R.B. decision "will further strengthen the traditional student-teacher relationship which is largely responsible for the superior training American physicians receive."

The labor board ruled that while interns and residents spend much of their time in direct patient care they participate in these programs not for the purpose of earning a living; instead they are there to pursue the graduate medical education that is a requirement for the practice of medicine.

In the lone dissenting opinion, John H. Fanning asserted that interns and residents performed a service for the hospital for which they were paid and were, therefore, employees as well as students and therefore entitled to representation.

Mr. Fanning found "a pathetic irony" in the majority's decision, saying that the Physicians National Housestaff Association, after the fight to bring nonprofit hospitals under N.L.R.B. jurisdiction, is "by fiat read out of the act."

The decision, he said, "is not grounded in the statute, the law or reason."

Inquiry on F.B.I.'s Buying Expanded to All Purchases

By JOHN M. CREWDSON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 22—The Justice Department's investigation of possible kickbacks to senior F.B.I. officials has been expanded to include scrutiny of all F.B.I. procurements in the last five years, a well-placed Justice Department official acknowledged today.

In light of allegations brought to the department's attention of improprieties in the bureau's purchases of electronic eavesdropping equipment, the official said, the inquiry "necessarily" has been extended to F.B.I. purchasing practices for other items, such as firearms and automobiles.

But lawyers in the department's criminal division, working under John Dowd, a leader of the Justice Department's organized-crime strike force who was handpicked to oversee the sensitive investigation, have not yet developed any firm evidence of kickbacks from any bureau suppliers to past or present senior Federal Bureau of Investigation executives, the official said.

Lack Is Cited
Under orders from Attorney General Edward H. Levi, the F.B.I. began an investigation of the relationship between itself and the U.S. Recording Company, but last month Mr. Levi rejected a report of that investigation as unacceptably ambiguous and ordered the F.B.I. to begin another.

One Justice Department official who has read the F.B.I.'s initial report described it today as "wanting." Asked whether it had exonerated Mr. Mohr and other F.B.I. executives who knew Mr. Tait, the official replied that, because of the report's ambiguity, it was "hard to say."

Reason Explained
Although the official insisted that at this point the Justice Department was "investigating facts, not people," he conceded that the investigation had focused principally on John P. Mohr, the former F.B.I. administrative chief who until his retirement in 1971 was in charge of bureau purchasing.

Mr. Mohr is one of a number of present and former F.B.I. executives who in the last year

ND FOR INQUIRY TO LEAKS IS CUT

se Unit Votes to Reduce $150,000 Amount for udy on Pike's Report

BY RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 22—A surprise move, a House committee today cut funds to investigate the leak of the Pike Intelligence Committee report from $350,000 to $200,000.

Originally, half of the $350,000 was earmarked to pay fees for persons who either be subpoenaed or would be questioned under oath.

But $75,000 remaining in the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct undertake the inquiry, to move leaves unclear the of the investigation that the House had voted originally to conduct only until.

Mr. Flynn's move came in a narrow vote of the accounts committee of the House Administration Committee on a 10-9 vote.

Representative Sam Devine of Ohio, the House Republican leader, said he was surprised as anyone that the motion carried, Mr. Flynn said.

In recent years the accounts committee has rarely voted for substantial reductions in funds for the committees of the House, according to its chairman, Representative Frank Thompson, Democrat of New Jersey.

Thompson also expressed concern at the outcome of the vote, noting that his concern was not with the total amount spent, but, rather, with the fact that those persons who are questioned during an investigation would be represented by lawyers. If this is accepted by the House Administration Committee and the full House, it would set an important precedent that could be used for Congressional investigations.

After the vote, committee members reiterated their belief that the $350,000 was a "boondoggle" as it was put by Representative Augustus F. S. Democrat of California.

In other election-year recent weeks the full House has tried to cut the amount of Federal money. In 1974, $46 million earmarked for development of Pennsylvania Avenue was rejected. Then, the House first voted against sending a delegation to London for Bicentennial ceremonies there, then retracted and approved the measure.

Conservatives and liberal the subcommittee gave the reason that the investigation was getting out of hand.

In March the House voted 113 to direct the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct to investigate the circumstances by which a secret of the House Select Committee on Intelligence was disclosed.

In a dispute on disclosure, the select committee, headed by Representative Otis G. Pike, of New York, proposed a report highly critical of operations of the Central Intelligence Agency and other intelligence-gathering agencies.

A dispute arose as to whether the report should be made public and last January the House voted not to release the report to the press and, however, accounts of the contents of the report started appearing in The New York Times and on CBS News.

Mr. Schorr, a correspondent for the CBS network here, reported available to The Voice, a weekly news magazine in New York, which published excerpts. This caused a furor in the House, which then voted to investigate.

Representative John J. Flynn, a Georgia Democrat who chairs the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, usually called the Ethics Committee, then drew up a bill and requested $350,000 to undertake the investigation.

Mr. Flynn said the funds would be used to hire 11 former members of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, plus a special team, as well as security secretarial help; several persons in all.

In addition, Mr. Flynn's budget for the investigation estimated $120,000 for travel and other expenses for staff and other.

Mr. Flynn's request for funds was approved by the accounts subcommittee last week, but none of the members then even hinted they wanted to cut the $350,000 figure.

Mr. Flynn's vote today, which he could not immediately announce if the $75,000 would be sufficient to continue the investigation that he had requested.

The committee still has about $10 million available to it as a regular appropriation from the House. But Mr. Flynn has that, under the special provision of the House controlling the string of committee aides, of this amount could not be used for the investigation of the leaking of the Pike re-

Waldenbooks New National Bestseller

Albert Speer's new book "has taken off with even greater velocity" than his INSIDE THE THIRD REICH

"Albert Speer's book is a deeply moving human document. It is also of extraordinary political and psychological interest. His self-analysis of the reasons why and how he could have been involved with the Nazi criminal gang and his remarkably frank account of the change within himself during twenty years are truly convincing. His description of the life of the former Nazi leaders in Spandau prison is a revealing record of the psychology of power bearers who have lost their power. The picture he paints of the four-power prison administration and their bureaucratic methods is often hilarious. This book is a must for anyone interested in the psychological motivation of political action and the problem of guilt and repentance. But beyond this it is so fascinatingly written that I could not put it down before I finished it." —ERICH FROMM

UDALL VOWS FIGHT ON MAJOR CRIME

Candidate, in Harlem, Says 3 to 4 Billion Should Be Spent on Problem

BY CHARLES MOHR
Representative Morris K. Udall promised yesterday that if elected President he would fight crime with an array of Federal programs costing as much as three or four billion dollars, saying liberals should not again let conservative politicians monopolize discussion of the problem.

The Arizona Democrat also struck out hard at his two main opponents in the April 6 New York Presidential primary election, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Jimmy Carter, the former Governor of Georgia, saying they had failed to show leadership on three major issues of the last decade—civil rights, the War in Vietnam and efforts to stop election-campaign abuses.

Both statements seemed to represent an attempt by Mr. Udall to raise his voice—at least figuratively—and to show a tougher political visage than has been his accustomed style. Employing uncharacteristically vivid rhetoric, Mr. Udall told a luncheon meeting of the Upper Manhattan Chamber of Commerce in Harlem that the streets of Harlem "belong to a few hoodlums in sneakers."
Youths Called 'Losers'
The tall Representative said he could recognize the problems of fatherless, ill-educated and jobless youths, calling them "losers from the day they were born."
"We can feel guilty about them," he said, "but we must not allow them to terrorize a city. . . . I say we can and we are going to take back the streets from these hoodlums, from the dangerous junkies and the demented killers."
Representative Udall told his mostly black audience of about 60 businessmen that "we cannot afford once more to leave the issue of crime" to such figures as Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama and to the Representative Morris K. Udall speaking to the Uptown Chamber of Commerce during their lunch in the New York State Office Building on 125th Street. The Presidential aspirant toured Harlem yesterday.

Republican Presidential aspirant Ronald Reagan, former Governor of California.
He said blacks were the most vulnerable victims of crime, and said, "We who believe in social justice must make clear to all America that criminal justice is a central part of our agenda."
Representative Udall said it was "unacceptable" for New York to have to discharge policemen at a time of rising crime and said, "I can make sure your Mayor has the resources to pay them and to keep them on the job."
Mr. Udall also proposed a greater Federal effort to curtail traffic in narcotics. He said the technology could be found to "search out and detect smuggled drugs" and that diplomatic and economic pressure could be used against Turkey, Mexico and other countries "that funnel hard drugs into the streets of Harlem."
Reflecting the views of his Arizona constituency, Mr. Udall has opposed registration of firearms and all but very limited forms of gun control. But yesterday he said he would "lead the fight against illegal interstate traffic in handguns."
He said present legislation, if enforced—could stop "the flood of cheap, deadly weapons that he did not have precise figures in mind, but that "we ought to be talking in terms of tripling" Federal expenditures on crime to a level of three to four billion dollars.

Mr. Udall, a former county prosecutor in Arizona, said that "old arguments" for rehabilitating criminals had been well-intentioned, but that "they didn't work."
He said that "about all" prisons could do was keep dangerous criminals out of society. He added, "let's stop pretending we are doing something we cannot do" in rehabilitation programs.
Mr. Udall began calling himself a "progressive" in recent weeks, in a belief that the word liberal evokes a widespread negative reaction among the public. His crime speech yesterday was seen by his staff as a major statement and, perhaps, as an effort to show that the most-liberal major candidate left in the race could take strong stands on social issues.
But in an interview yesterday afternoon Mr. Udall also continued to draw a line between himself and Senator Jackson and Mr. Carter.
Last night Mr. Udall attended a fund-raising cocktail party at the Manhattan house of Prof. Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr.

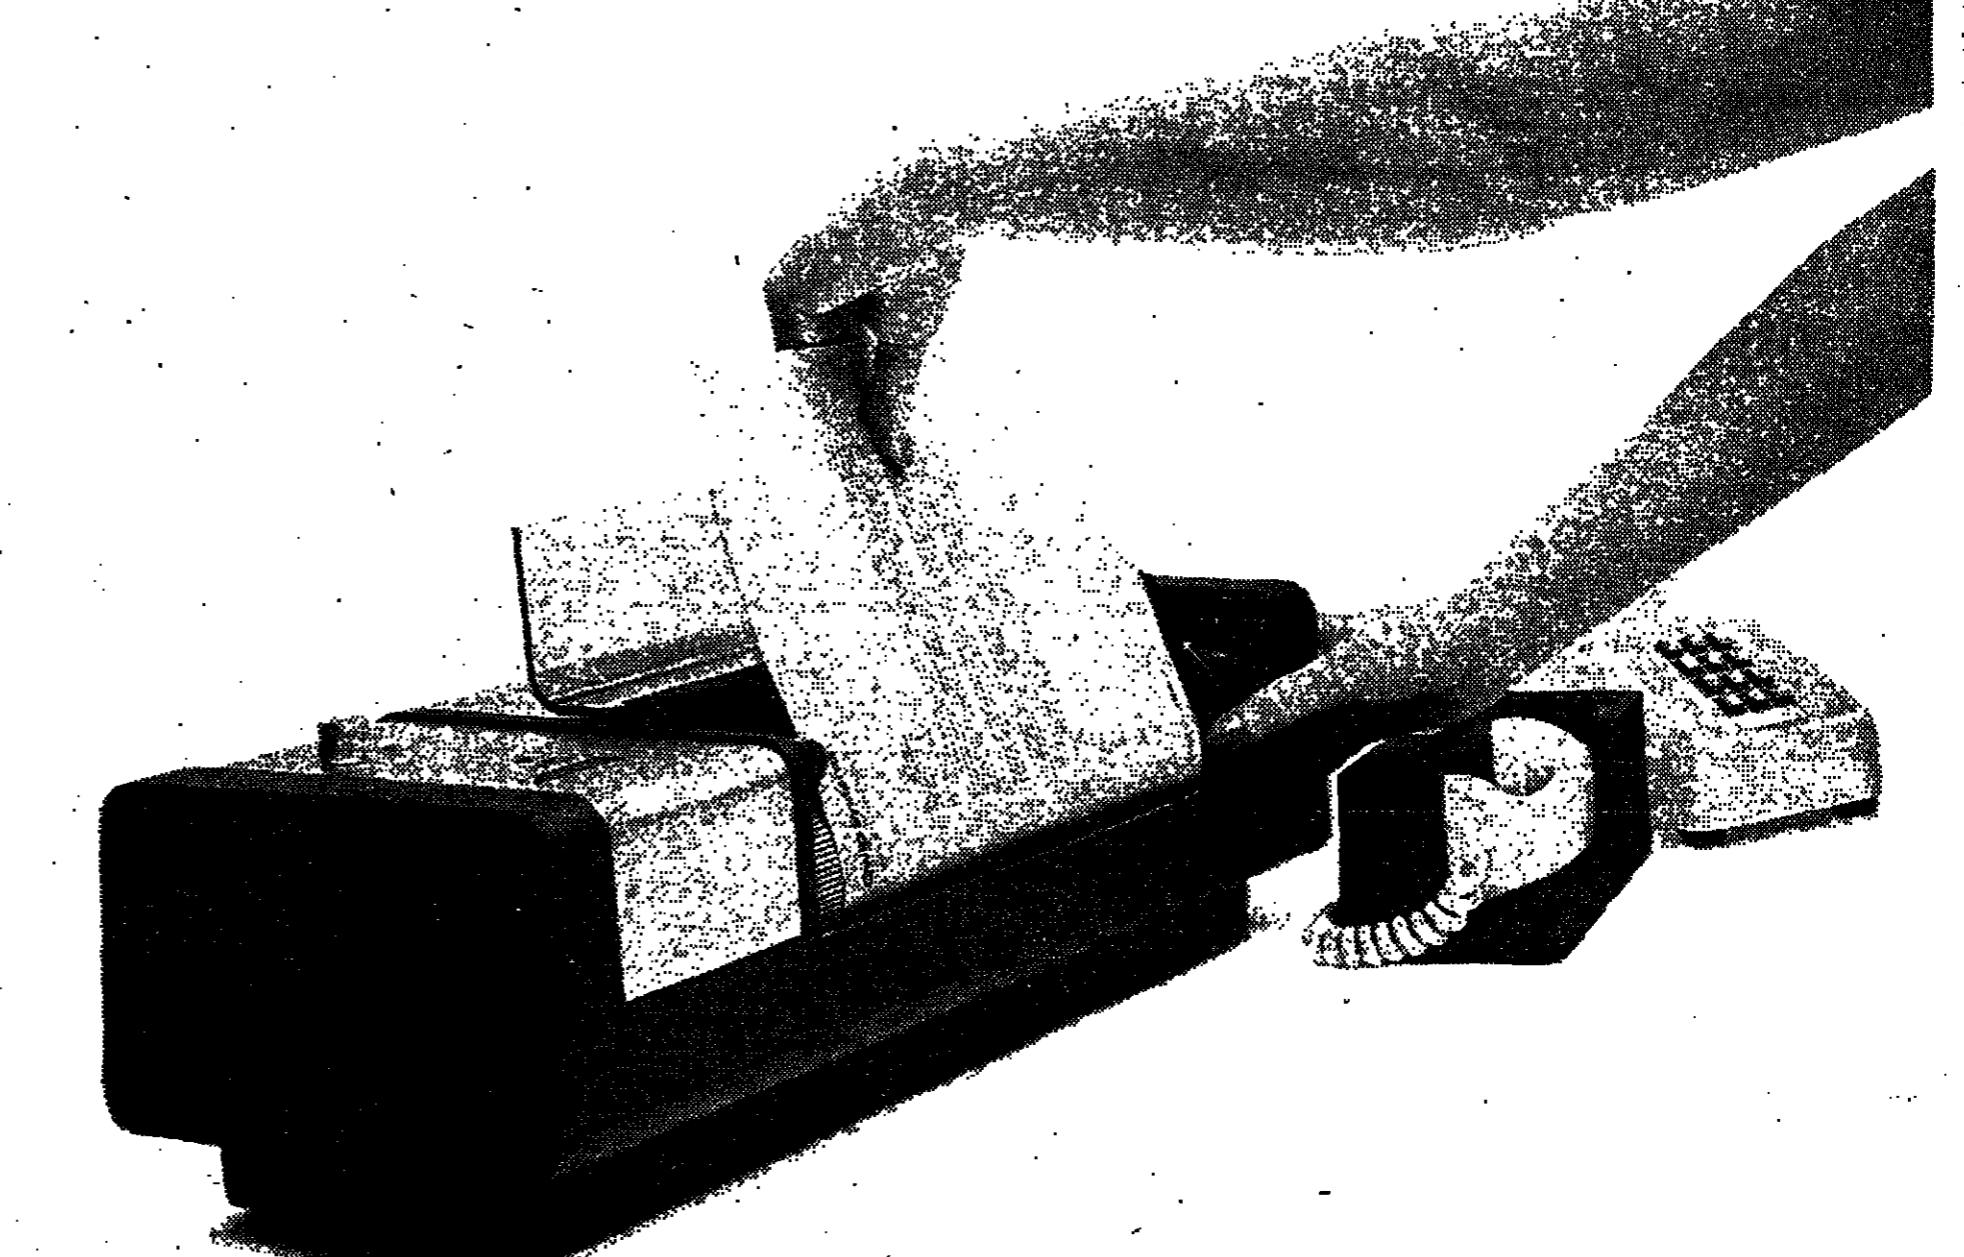

Changes Cited
The Democratic candidate also said Federal funds now allocated to the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration mainly for police equipment and "hardware" should be reallocated to the courts and criminal justice system to reduce "the logjam at the courthouse door."
This would reduce plea bargaining and a tendency to release "the guilty" too soon, Mr. Udall asserted.
He said that flexible, indeterminate sentencing had "bred cynicism, not justice," and called for "a very narrow range of sentencing discretion for judges."
Mr. Udall also called for "restitution programs" or compensation for victims of crime.
Asked later about the cost of his proposals, Mr. Udall said that he did not have precise

Shriver Is 5th Democrat To Quit Presidential Race

WASHINGTON, March 22—Sargent Shriver became today the fifth Democrat to abandon pursuit of the party's Presidential nomination, contending that his six-month campaign had been a "remarkable success" in the light of the handicaps he faced.

Mr. Shriver finished fifth in the New Hampshire and Massachusetts primaries, second in Vermont and third in Illinois. His departure reduced the field of Democratic candidates campaigning in more than one state to six—former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, Senator Frank Church of Idaho and former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma, who has cut down his effort considerably.
Two other Democratic candidates—Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California and Senator Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia—are still considered favorites from their respective states.
Mr. Shriver, the brother-in-law of Senator Edward M. Kennedy, told a news conference at the National Press Club that he had failed because he entered the race too late, he had no record in elective office or Government title and was regarded in some circles as "nothing more" than a relative by marriage of the Kennedy family.
"Under those circumstances," he said, "I think we had really remarkable results, remarkable success."
No Hint on Shift
Mr. Shriver declined to say whom he would now support for the nomination, postponing this decision until after a vacation of a week or 10 days and after the New York and Wisconsin primaries. He did not indicate any enthusiasm, however, for the current candidates.
"We have not yet by any means seen all the characters who appear in this play," he predicted at one point. "This is an unfolding drama."

In response to questions, Mr. Shriver said he thought Mr. Carter would be hard to stop. "I think he will be, I think he already is"—and repeated his campaign statement that he would not support Governor Wallace. But he declined to comment on other candidates' chances.
Mr. Shriver said his campaign had a deficit of about $50,000 after expenditures of over $800,000. The Federal Election Commission approved a subsidy payment of $3,000 for his campaign today, but he said he did not plan to apply for any further Federal assistance.
The 60-year-old former Ambassador to France who had also been Peace Corps director said he would not attempt to influence Senator Kennedy to enter the race now that he had dropped out.
No Pressure on Kennedy
"I'm not going to be a party to putting any more pressure on him than he already has," Mr. Shriver said.
The 1972 Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee also said he would leave his name on the ballot in one state, Texas, to permit his delegates there to win seats at the national convention, where they will now be uncommitted. Otherwise, his withdrawal releases the 11 delegates he had won to date.
In his formal statement, Mr. Shriver charged that some politicians "speak a simple language, proposing simple solutions and simple ideas. Like stroking a cat's back they hope the voters will purr. But narcissism is a disservice to Democracy."
Asked if this was a reference to Mr. Carter, he replied that he was not trying to single out anyone and that there were such people in both parties.
Democrats who had previously withdrawn from the Presidential race are former Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina, Senator Lloyd M. Bentsen of Texas, Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana and Gov. Milton J. Shapp of Pennsylvania.

Wallace Hopes for Victory In North Carolina Today

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.
Special to The New York Times

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C., March 22—In a last-minute effort to have off defeat by Jimmy Carter in tomorrow's Democratic Presidential primary, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama traveled to six North Carolina cities and towns today, proclaiming his "fine health" and charging the former Georgia Governor with "misleading" voters.

Mr. Carter, his confidence buoyed by polls that showed him the favorite by about 10 points, ignored the charge. He retorted politically safe enough to use the day making a speech in Florida, a state in which he already has met and defeated Mr. Wallace.

Mr. Wallace has been beaten by Mr. Carter not only in Florida but also in Illinois. He badly needs a primary victory against a fellow Southerner—if he is to remain what he calls a "bona fide" candidate.

In the last few days, Mr. Wallace's campaign has seemed to be in disarray and despair, though the candidate himself does not seem notably upset.

Jackson's Carolina Tactics Repeat Unstable Pattern

By R. W. APPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

GREENSBORO, N.C., March 22—The phone rings and rings at the Jackson-for-President office in Raleigh. On the day before the North Carolina primary, there is no one there to answer at noon or at 4 P.M.

For the fourth time in six Presidential primaries this year, Senator Henry M. Jackson has flouted out, leaving the field, in this case, to former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

Only in Massachusetts, where he won did the Washington Senator participate fully from the start.

Mr. Jackson's theory is that most of the early tests do not matter very much, that he will win by concentrating on a few big states, elbowing past Mr. Carter by defeating him in New York April 8 and Pennsylvania April 27. He has been able to invest far more time and money there while Mr. Carter, strapped for both, has been preoccupied elsewhere.

"March was Carter's month," said William Brawley, a national campaign coordinator for Mr. Jackson. "April will be Scoop Jackson's."

Mr. Brawley was speaking by telephone from Harrisburg, where he was busy with preparations for the Pennsylvania campaign. He had been in charge here until Mr. Jackson's abrupt withdrawal from North Carolina 10 days ago.

The story of the Jackson campaign in this state is illustrative of the unusual tactical

Today's Primary

North Carolina votes today in the nation's sixth Presidential primary election of 1976.

Only two of six Democratic candidates on the ballot—former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama—campaigning actively in the state.

Also entered are Senator Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, who has dropped his effort; Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona and former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma.

The Republican race pits President Ford against California's Ronald Reagan of California.

Democratic voters will choose 61 delegates to their national convention; Republicans will select 54. The polls will be open from 6:30 A.M. to 7:30 P.M., Eastern standard time.

Gene Lanier in his grocery store in Sanford, N.C. Concerning the Presidential elections, he said: "I haven't heard too much about it. Some Carter, some Wallace. Ford is strong, he'll win."

2 Southerners Even in N. Carolina Town

By WAYNE KING
Special to The New York Times

SANFORD, N.C.—Twenty-five years ago, this small town lying almost in the exact geographic center of North Carolina was fundamentally a tobacco town. There was some industry, to be sure, but it was tobacco and a few other cash crops, according to Hal T. Siler, the industrious executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce, that made or broke the local economy year after year.

Now that has changed. Dramatically in the last 10 years, and Sanford, N.C., is an industrial town, diversified, bustling, aggressive—typical, as much as one town can be, of the transitional South.

Wallace won in '68. With the economic changes have come social and political changes. Sanford and surrounding Lee County can no longer be confidently counted as dyed-in-the-wool Wallace country.

In 1968 Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama carried Lee County in the general election with 42 percent of the vote, well ahead of Richard M. Nixon and Hubert H. Humphrey, both with 29 percent. In the 1972 Presidential primary, Mr. Wallace drew 57 percent of the Democratic vote, with former Gov. Terry Sanford getting 36 percent and the remainder scattered among three other candidates.

Sanford is a small town whose political climate was tested in a visit last month, along with urban, suburban and rural areas around the country. Now, on the eve of the North Carolina primary election, a second visit finds Sanford about evenly divided between Governor Wallace and former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia.

Most of those in Sanford who would venture an opinion, in fact, gave Mr. Carter a slight edge.

"Race is no longer an issue," said one knowledgeable source. "Right now, the race today.

There appeared little likelihood that the Justice would rule for a month to permit today a compromise that would grant another 20-day stay, but no bill has cleared either chamber in that time.

Election Board Loses Most of Power

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 22—The Federal Election Commission lost most of its authority today when Congress failed to meet a Supreme Court deadline for reconstituting the agency to make it Constitutional.

Hours before the commission went into almost total eclipse, it approved payment of $980,000 in Federal primary subsidies for Presidential candidates, the last money it can authorize until Congress restores its power.

Trying to crack what Senator Mike Mansfield of Montana, the Democratic leader, called "an unbreakable deadlock," Senate leaders of both parties budded sporadically in the afternoon, attempting to draft a compromise bill that could attract a Senate majority and escape a Presidential veto.

Senate debate and voting last week indicated that neither the unwieldy and controversial Democratic campaign bill nor simpler Republican alternatives focused on continuing the commission had broad enough support to pass.

The Democratic bill, 65 pages long, would virtually wipe out the independence of the Election Commission and includes other features unacceptable to the Republican alternatives.

Changes in the New York electoral law and the new situation created by the withdrawal of Gov. Milton J. Shapp of Pennsylvania were cited as reasons for the switch. The real reason was that Mr. Jackson could hope to finish no better, in Mr. Brawley's view, than "a solid third" in other words, last.

Moynihan Campaigns

MILWAUKEE, March 22 (UPI)—Daniel P. Moynihan, former United States representative to the United Nations, said today that Mr. Jackson was the "best qualified" candidate for President in either party because of his long experience in foreign affairs.

"He is the best qualified of the many qualified candidates," Mr. Moynihan said at a news conference in a day-long trip around the state in support of Mr. Jackson's candidacy.

Wallace just ain't got a thing to hang his hat on." Area schools were not desegregated in Sanford until 1968, and in the wake of the new policy, there were fights, rock throwing, closed schools, a few fires and a few nights of curfews. The situation has cooled off, however, and the town's high school powerhouse athletic teams boast a number of black standouts.

G. O. P. Vote Later. Strictly as a political matter, however, the source said, "A lot of registered Democrats who are going to choose between Wallace and Carter will end up voting for Ford or Reagan in November."

Even here, however, there seems to be a perceptible shift in sentiment, if indeed these pre-election predictions come to pass. President Ford is given a decided, if not overwhelming, edge in the unofficial predictions, something of a surprise in a very conservative area.

In any case, there continues to hang over the election season in Sanford a haze of disinterest. Conversations around the town hint at several reasons—the lack of a central flaming issue, a perception of the candidates, and over it all a leavening of cynicism.

"Well, frankly, you just don't hear much talk about politics," said Roy Stewart, the affable Mayor. "It seems to me most of the attention is on Jimmy Love; he's a lawyer from here in Sanford. In the state legislature, and he's running for Congress in this district. The Presidency? Well, you hear a little talk at breakfast, maybe, but it just hasn't heated up yet."

For his own part, the Mayor, who is accounted a shrewd politician, is far more interested in talking about the 50 golf courses that lie within 40 miles of Sanford.

"Race is no longer an issue," said one knowledgeable source. "Right now, the race today.

There appeared little likelihood that the Justice would rule for a month to permit today a compromise that would grant another 20-day stay, but no bill has cleared either chamber in that time.

The Democratic committee, and the seven candidates were not parties to the original suit, that brought about the invalidation of the commission and some sections of the campaign law, so they were forced to ask the Court for permission to ask for a stay.

The bulk of today's subsidies went to Governor Wallace ($340,000), President Ford ($168,000) and former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California ($123,000). All told, the commission has authorized more than $12.6 million in such payments this year.

A new potential beneficiary emerged today when Representative Wayne L. Hays of Ohio, chairman of the House Administration Committee, filed as a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Mr. Hays, one of the chief Congressional critics of the Election Commission, later told a National Press Club luncheon that he was merely becoming a favorite son candidate in six Ohio Congressional districts to try to assure that his supporters there would be chosen as convention delegates.

He said he had decided not to try to become eligible for campaign subsidies, despite a "big temptation" to raise the necessary $100,000 privately, then put the Federal matching money into his Congressional campaign.

In his prepared text from which he only read briefly, Mr. Hays said that Congress would produce "any better terms" if the President vetoed the Democratic campaign bill, and insisted on a simple extension of the commission.

The Supreme Court's objections would be satisfied if Congress makes all six members of the commission appointive rather than four of them if Congress and the White House ever agree on restoring the agency to full effectiveness.

Reagan Declares Ford Is Evading Key Issues

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times

GREENSBORO, N.C., March 22—Ronald Reagan ended his North Carolina campaign today by charging that President Ford and his supporters were evading crucial issues and might be engaging in "dirty tricks."

"The Ford people have refused to debate the issues that are of importance to the people of this country," the former California Governor said as he completed a five-day tour across this state by forecasting a close contest in the Republican Presidential primary tomorrow. The President campaigned in North Carolina Saturday and was in Washington today.

Mr. Reagan challenged the President to declare "without equivocation that the United States had more military power than the Soviet Union, holding that it was not enough for Mr. Ford to assert that the United States was "second to none."

At a news conference here, one of four that Mr. Reagan conducted before traveling tonight to Wisconsin, he told questioners that his North Carolina campaign aides had complained of foul play by the Ford camp.

The charge arose when a reporter asked Mr. Reagan if it was true that his organization was disintegrating, and that Mr. Reagan's wife, Nancy, was taking charge.

Laughs at Question. Laughing, Mr. Reagan replied that the suggestion "sounds like something that might have come out of Spencer and Roberts." The reference was to Stuart Spencer, the acting chairman of the Ford campaign, and William Roberts, a trouble-shooter for Mr. Ford's campaign committee.

"It dangerously approaches what might be called dirty tricks," Mr. Reagan added. Later, he told another questioner that he had "heard stories" from supporters that someone had tried to disrupt his North Carolina organization by canceling reservations for airplane flights and leases for telephone lines.

He said that he had also been told of dismissals of state employees who supported him. Implicit in the remark was that Gov. James E. Folsom, Jr., the chairman of Mr. Ford's campaign in the southeastern states, was responsible for such dismissals.

Mr. Reagan said that he had only "hearsay" knowledge of the alleged dirty tricks. But he said that since they were directed at his organization, he had to "assume" Mr. Ford's supporters were behind them. "I don't know how widespread it is," he added.

He began each of the news conferences—in Asheville, Charlotte, Greensboro and Raleigh—by declaring that he still hoped to win the primary here tomorrow, but that he was not predicting a victory.

"Win, lose or draw, I am continuing in the campaign," he added. There was, nonetheless, a wistful tone to his professions of confidence that he could recoup sufficient strength to confront Mr. Ford on equal terms at the Republican convention in August.

Hopes to Do Well. "I expect to win some primaries," he said. "I can't tell you which ones."

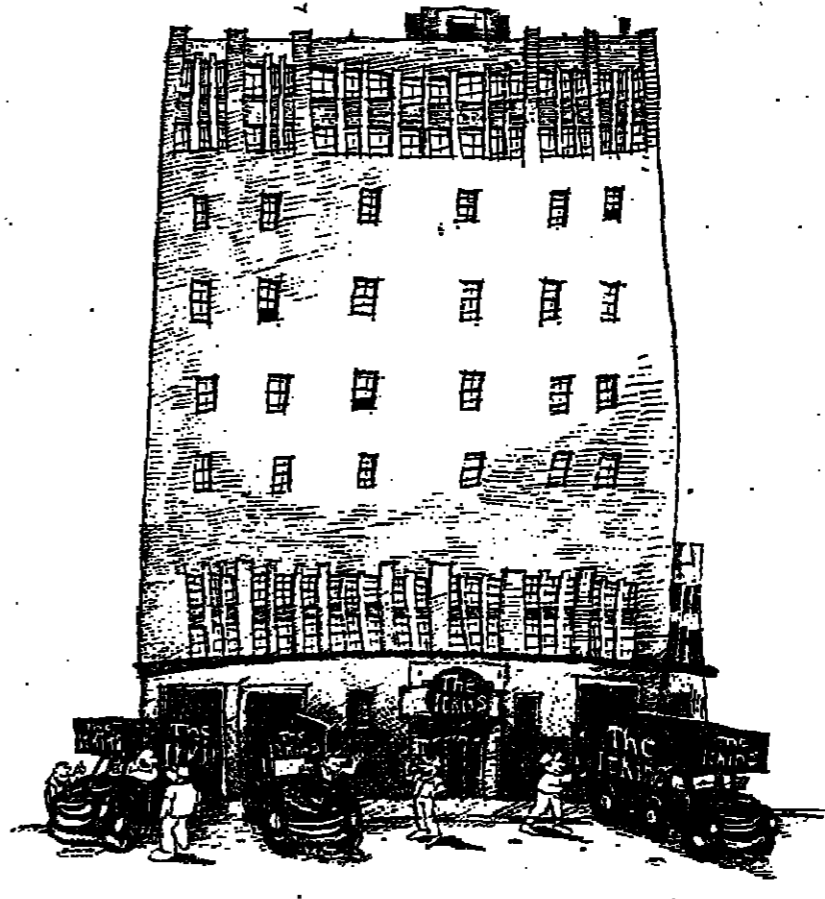

Mr. Reagan pressed to say where he might be able to defeat Mr. Ford, said only that he hoped to do well in primary states in Texas and California and in party conventions in Iowa, Arizona, Alaska, Washington State, South Carolina and Oklahoma.

Citing remarks attributed to armament experts in and outside the Ford Administration, Mr. Reagan said that he was convinced the United States was slipping perilously behind the Soviet Union in military strength.

He said that the President and Donald H. Rumsfeld, the Secretary of Defense, had refused to state publicly that the United States was superior to the Soviet in armed forces.

"I challenge Mr. Ford to tell the American people that we are No. 1," he said.

Anyone contributing $1,000 will be a founder-member. For every $1,000 given to the fund, the donor will be entitled to a seat. The hope is that those who contribute large sums will donate some of the seats to organizations that can turn over the tickets to music students.

Mr. Stern, the violinist, one of the key men in the fund drive, pointed out that the campaign was different from most cultural fund-raising efforts in that Carnegie Hall was not in a desperate financial state, though it was losing money.

"We are not about to shut the doors," he said. "We are planning the underpinnings of Carnegie Hall for future generations."

The drive for funds comes at a time when Carnegie Hall begins one of the busiest seasons in its history. In the early part of the next season it will be booking the New York Philharmonic, which will be temporarily without a home because of extensive repairs to Avery Fisher Hall at Lincoln Center.

Among the musical groups scheduled for Carnegie Hall next season are the symphonies from Chicago, London, Philadelphia, Boston, Cleveland, The Hague, Detroit, St. Louis, Stockholm, Baltimore, Minnesota, Cincinnati, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Vienna, Buffalo and Houston.

The concert hall will have its usual array of world-famous soloists. But there will be nothing at the regular concerts comparable to the special program of May 18.

"Imagine," said Mr. Chapin, "a trio of Rostropovich, Bernstein and Stern." He said that Mr. Rostropovich and Mr. Fischer-Dieskau had both canceled dates abroad to be at Carnegie Hall.

"There is not an artist who can walk on that stage," said Mr. Stern, who has played there many times, "who does not feel the osmosis of association with the great artists of the past. It is in every pore of wood on that stage."

Mr. Debs said it was very likely that the appeal to corporation executives would bring responses of much more than $1,000 each. Therefore executives could ask to donate seats for students through such institutions as the Juilliard School.

"We might work up a slogan such as 'Endow the Sound of Carnegie Hall,'" Mr. Stern said. Besides the $1,000 or more contributions to be asked to contribute four-digit sums, more seats, an appeal will be made to such "purely local" businesses as department stores and banks.

As examples of how the money was to be used to improve Carnegie Hall, Mr. Stern said that while the building itself was in good shape, acoustics would not be tampered with, carpets, seats and electrical work had to be done. One purpose of the drive is to assume that the city, because of its fiscal crisis, will not be able to contribute to the support of Carnegie Hall.

The Carnegie Hall Corporation, according to Mr. Debs, has already paid about $3 million in rental fees to the city since it took over the building in 1963, when it was damaged with destruction of the main floor. The building could not survive the operation from the then Carnegie Hall at Lincoln Center that building has since been destroyed.

Until 1973, Carnegie Hall operated solvently and spent about $1.5 million in improvements of the building. Surpluses acquired during those years were also applied in the last couple of years to deficits caused by inflationary factors.

Mr. Stern added that Carnegie Hall was an international symbol with a strong appeal for everyone interested in music.

"We do not think that Carnegie Hall belongs to us," he said. "Carnegie Hall is synonymous for what is going on in music in the United States. It establishes music standards for the United States."

More Than Real Estate

That is why we have had no refusals so far. I don't think there has ever been such a concert such as the one we are planning for May 18. Certainly not in 75 years. Members of the New York Philharmonic are already volunteering to play that night. On that night we will decorate the stage so that the sense of music's history will be visible as well as the Stein said.

Mr. Chapin added: "Carnegie Hall is a glory of the city and the United States. In the 16 years since Carnegie Hall was saved from demolition by Mr. Chapin, it has saved only that it was vital to the cultural life of the city, but also that at least two major concert halls were needed here. He said that if Avery Fisher Hall was not ready for the New York Philharmonic after it had finished its early concerts at Carnegie Hall, the orchestra would probably be performing at the Beacon Theater, on Broadway near 73d Street.

He would like to have been able to accommodate the New York Philharmonic for the entire season if they needed it, but we are already overbooked for next season," Mr. Bloom said.

"It was much more than real estate that was saved in 1960." Plans have been made to use part of the money from the fund drive to expand musical programs in neighborhoods in the city and to work with programs in other cultural centers in the nation, Mr. Bloom said.

In connection with the plan for a youth orchestra, Mr. Stern said: "Carnegie Hall should be the goal for the best of young people in the United States."

To build the youth center, the fund raisers would seek money from foundations to match its own contribution. The plan is to contribute $1 million and get $1 million in matching funds and then return money to a revolving fund set up by the fund drive.

The Metropolitan Opera House and Carnegie Hall are the two music institutions here with a national base," Mr. Stern said.

Mr. Chapin added: "Carnegie Hall is a glory of the city and the United States. In the 16 years since Carnegie Hall was saved from demolition by Mr. Chapin, it has saved only that it was vital to the cultural life of the city, but also that at least two major concert halls were needed here. He said that if Avery Fisher Hall was not ready for the New York Philharmonic after it had finished its early concerts at Carnegie Hall, the orchestra would probably be performing at the Beacon Theater, on Broadway near 73d Street.

Carnegie Hall Board Chairman Richard Abraham Debs

ALBIN KREBS might be expected, the chairman of the Carnegie Society Inc., which signs a two-month new Carnegie Hall National Endowment Fund, is a devoted lover of music. Less likely to assume, however, is that Richard Debs, who took post as the society's administrative officer, is a man with varied past, who opens to make his second-ranking in the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

Mr. Debs, who lives in Larchmont with three children, Elizabeth and Nicholas, have a summer place at Bass River on Cape Cod, where Mr. Debs likes to swim and sail his boat. "But we've both got murderous schedules, and we don't get up to the Cape—my wife was born up there—very often," Mr. Debs said yesterday. "Last week we went to two concerts at Carnegie Hall, but it's a rare week when we go to even one concert or to the Metropolitan Opera. For one thing, I do a lot of traveling, particularly in the Middle East."

For many years Mr. Debs' interest in Carnegie Hall was passive—he simply went to concerts there. "But about six or seven years ago," he said, Eugene Becker, former budget director of the city, and James D. Wolfensohn, now running Schroeder's Bank in London, both board members of the Carnegie Hall Society, "hooked me into taking an active part in its affairs." In his part-time, unpaid position as board chairman, Mr. Debs heads the group of volunteers who approve the society's policies and activities in behalf of Carnegie Hall.

Impressive Record. 15-year-old Mr. Debs, 6 feet 2 inches tall, weighs 190 pounds. "I'm willing to accept a heating on that figure," he smiled when he was called an "academic bum." He's no denying he has resolute academic record. In 1932, Mr. Debs was a cum laude graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, a Master of Arts in 1936, and later a doctorate from Princeton University, where he was a Foundation Fellow. "There was a production at the Harvard Law School where Mr. Debs had a degree in 1938. That he spent a year up under a joint Harvard-Princeton fellowship, doing a research project on management. In 1952-53, he earned a Fulbright scholarship to the University of Toronto, where he would seem only naturally that, being exiled to Academe for so many years, Mr. Debs would find a wife in that atmosphere. And so he did in 1958, when he married Barbara Knowles, who has taught art history at Vassar, Harvard and Manhattanville College in Purchase, N. Y. Mrs. Debs is now president of Manhattanville.

Mr. Debs joined the legal staff of the Federal Reserve in 1960, and by 1965 was appointed the bank's secretary. In 1969 he became a vice president, in charge of the bank's government bond and securities sales department, the largest of its kind in the world. As first vice president of the Fed, Mr. Debs is charged with general administrative responsibilities for bank operations, and takes acting charge when Paul Volcker, the Fed's president, is out of town.

In discussing the Carnegie Hall fund-raising effort yesterday, Mr. Debs mentioned the fact that the bank's vaults, containing gold now worth about $50 billion on the free market, are in the building in downtown New York. "But mustn't touch," he said, his eyes twinkling. There was a clear hint of wisdom in the air.

'1600' Takes Rough Road to Broadway

By MEL GUSSOW

WASHINGTON, March 23 —Broadway musicals are not born, they are remade on the road, but if there ever was—at least on paper—a million-dollar sure thing it was "1600 Pennsylvania Avenue."

Its creators, Alan Jay Lerner ("My Fair Lady") and Leonard Bernstein ("West Side Story"), are acknowledged grandmasters of the American musical theater.

The subject matter, a 100-year history of the White House, what Mr. Lerner labels "a musical about the problems of housekeeping," a sort of upstairs-downstairs view of First Families, seemed perfectly suited to this Bicentennial season.

But despite all the predictions of success, "1600 Pennsylvania Avenue" has been having a troublesome journey to Broadway—as much a trial as a tryout.

On Broadway in May

The reviews were bad in Philadelphia. The director and the choreographer have been replaced. The opening in Washington was postponed several days and the show's creators are working day and night to transform it into a hit before it opens on Broadway on May 4.

Mr. Lerner decided to write a musical that would express his criticism of his country as well as patriotism. He turned to Mr. Bernstein, who had been a contemporary of his, though not a classmate, at Harvard.

They are good friends and they had talked on many occasions about possible collaboration. Mr. Lerner wanted a libretto sent to Mr. Bernstein and he immediately agreed to join forces.

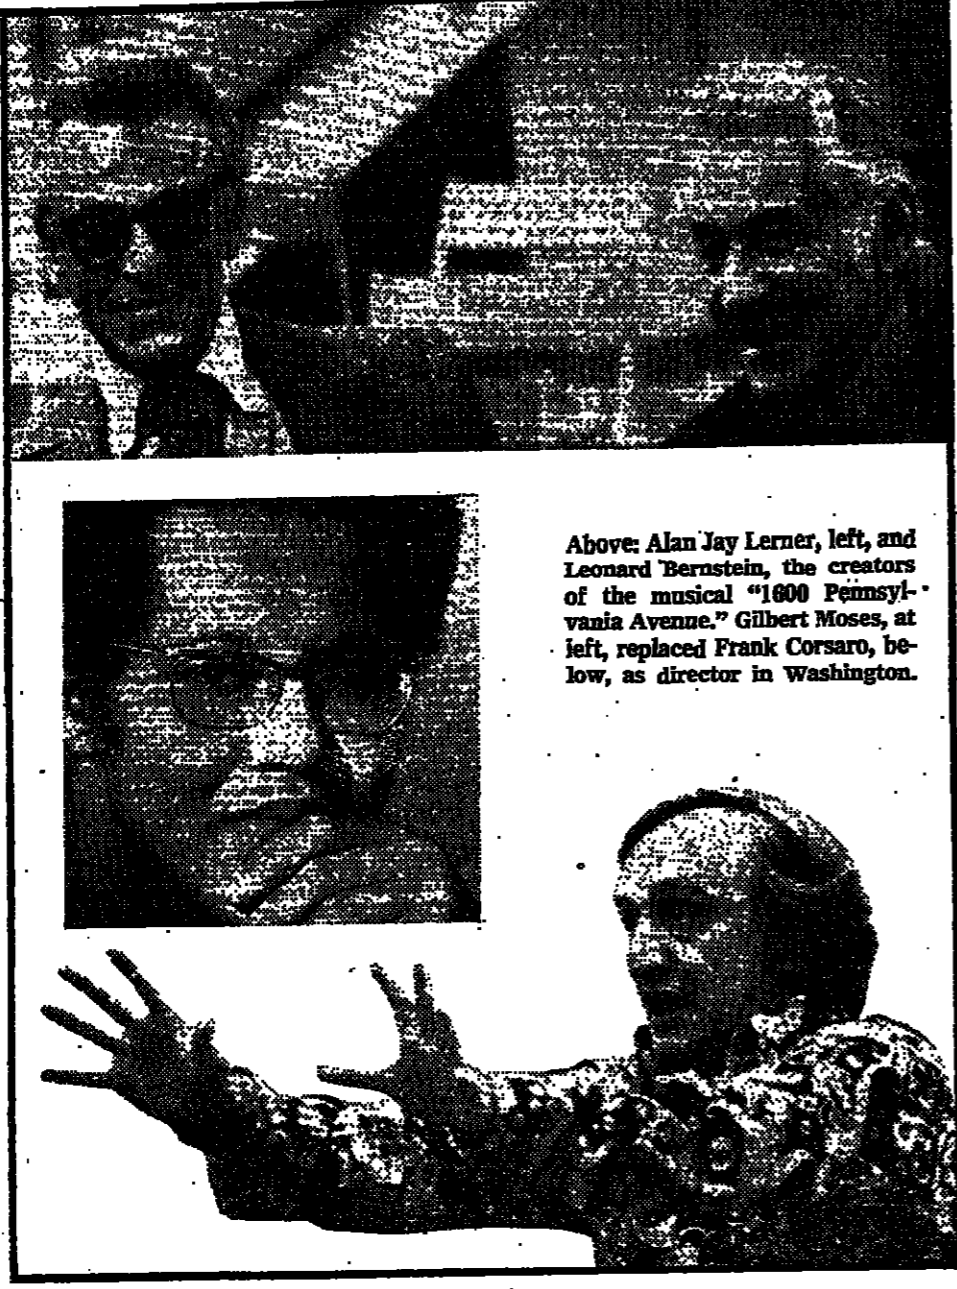

Over the next three years, they wrote together and separately, in person, by mail and by telephone, fitting the composition in between Mr. Bernstein's composing engagements. In most cases the lyrics came first, then the music.

The impetus for the show was provided by Mr. Lerner's interest in American history. "I am outraged at some of it, amused at other parts, appalled how delicately and gently Presidents were handled when they should have been tarred and feathered—such as Rutherford B. Hayes. I think of him as a monster." On the other hand, Chester Alan Arthur became for him, a surprise hero.

A Searching for Structure Weighing one President against the other (and omitting some) and balancing that against four generations of a fictional black family acting as servants in the White House, the musical became not only a backstage, but a backstage show. It was designed as a play within a play—a rehearsal that would parallel the nation's own searching for structure.

The musical grew larger and longer. "The only thing Bicentennial about it," Mr. Lerner joked, "is that we've been working on it for 200 years."

The fact of the show and the reputation of its creators were enough to assure financing ($300,000), completely by private subscription, a large advance sale, and the involvement of other talented people—Roger L. Stevens and Robert Whitehead as producers, Frank Corsaro as director and Ken Howard, Patricia Routledge and Gilbert Price as stars. Mr. Howard said that he signed on without seeing the script and after hearing only a little of the music.

How can you turn down the lead in a Leonard Bernstein-Alan Jay Lerner musical? Mr. Howard asked. "They're both mighty men. It could be an event. For me, for the first time, it was the full crash."

By the time it was in rehearsal, the show had 27 songs, or rather, pieces of music. "The orchestrated score is as long as 'Das Rheingold'—90 pages," Mr. Bernstein said.

With the book not finished and the scenery still being constructed, the show moved to Philadelphia. "Like a juggernaut," Mr. Bernstein said, "you can't stop it."

In Philadelphia, the juggernaut was slowed by the critics. Variety called it "a Bicentennial bore." It was a Bicentennial bore, Mr. Lerner observed.

Despite the adverse reviews, the show was almost a sellout in Philadelphia, as it is now in Washington. While still performing, the musical stayed in rehearsal. Songs were cut, scenes shifted, new lines inserted, but the work apparently remained shaky.

"We were at loggerheads," Mr. Corsaro said, and because of "artistic differences," he left the show.

These are very determined gentlemen," he said, "and I wish them well.

But in the last week in Philadelphia the show set a box-office record of $132,158 at the Forrest Theater.

Mr. Corsaro and Donald McKayle, the choreographer, left the show in Philadelphia. Gilbert Moses and George Faison joined it as a team in Washington.

Abraham Lincoln Added Abraham Lincoln also joined the show in Washington.

From the beginning, one question was which Presidents to personify on stage. The evening had always started with George Washington and ended with Theodore Roosevelt.

Work has continued around the clock—with script conferences, writing sessions, rehearsals and performances.

The command post is in the Watergate Hotel, where the principals are bivouacked on various floors. Frequently, Mr. Lerner stays up all night writing new scenes, which are dispatched to him by air.

Mr. Lerner said that he has followed their intuition and also the response of the audience—"which can be contradictory.

What do you do on the road with a musical? he asked. "You work on the second act. I'm anxious about it, but I think there's a light there. I think the show has a chance to unite an audience."

There was no performance on Sunday, but rehearsals began at noon and continued until midnight. In a rehearsal room in Kennedy Center, Mr. Faison led the company through a satirical minstrel show number, using new material that Mr. Lerner had written that previous night.

A new second act was going in tonight. Tomorrow the show would be frozen. Wednesday it will face the Washington critics. The opening show is still "Rehearsing," with actors preparing to turn into characters. The company will sing. "If we keep on our toes and it doesn't close, it's going to be great."

is affected. One problem in the revisions is that Mr. Bernstein has written a full orchestral score, not a series of separate songs; it is not easy to splice and paste.

Before the first preview last week, Mr. Bernstein appeared on stage. He said he was not going to apologize for the state of the show; then he apologized for the state of the show. Mr. Lerner said that such a speech was traditional on his musicals.

He called it "the famous Moss Hart speech," after his late director who made it even before his first preview, even that of "My Fair Lady."

"It's kind of brutalizing," Mr. Howard said. "It's a totally different show each week." While one show is on stage, another is being written and sometimes, as is of a third, are in rehearsal.

Mr. Lerner agreed that the main difficulty was finding a unifying style. One thing that has diminished is the rehearsal framework. In addition, "Two or three songs" have been cut, said Mr. Lerner.

The authors have followed their intuition and also the response of the audience—"which can be contradictory.

Music: Composer Boulez
Conducts the Brooklyn Philharmonia in Local Premiere of His 'Domaines'

By DONAL HENAHAN
At some point late in the last century it occurred to lives and probably other composers that fresh sounds and undreamed-of musical complexities might be achieved by setting musicians free to wander about the orchestra while playing.

Mr. Boulez conducted from the center of the stage, ringed by five instrumental groups, rotating his podium periodically to face a different band, while Mr. Drucker stroled about to a variety of solo positions (a dozen of them, if one's count was accurate).

The program also included a work by a Boulez student, Gilbert Amy ("Seven Sites") and a Boulez teacher, Olivier Messiaen (two selections from "Catalogue d'Oiseaux").

Rangers: Proud Team Stumbles to Mediocrity

Dave Maloney being carried from the ice Sunday night. It symbolized the end of the season for the Rangers.

In this Bicentennial year, on their Golden Anniversary, after nine consecutive years in the Stanley Cup playoffs and despite two coaches and a new general manager, the New York Rangers have turned out to be the flop of the town.

At the moment the Rangers are 1 point away from elimination in the National Hockey League race, but that's just the death throes. The deteriorating cancer began years ago. Exactly when depends on how bitter you are or how good your memory.

Trying to pinpoint the reasons for the demise of the once-proud hockey team also depends on one's viewpoint. Management prefers to keep a low profile, alluding to bad luck and fate; coaches don't want to demoralize their charges any further, while the players fear talking too much for their own sakes.

Garden fans prove the most vocal, only the Rangers' opponents feel free to sound off with the truth. The Ranger snowball, which once was a happy little missile rolling toward a Stanley Cup but grew into a gigantic, misdirected mess, started forming in 1972 and exploded in 1976.

In the summer of '72, General Manager Emile Francis fended off the impending talent raid of the rival World Hockey Association by paying his stars the largest salaries in the history of the league. Buoyed by such seeming security, William Jennings, the club president, asserted:

"We've just bought ourselves a Stanley Cup."

The next three years proved him dead wrong. The closest the Rangers got to winning the cup for the first time since 1940 was a one-goal loss to the Philadelphia Flyers

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar called Bob Rakel a racist. Earl Monroe threw a ball at Jake O'Donnell and Norm Van Lier hit Ken Sussman with a wad of chewing gum. Kevin Loughery collected six technical fouls in one game. Hubie Brown accosted Norm Drucker after a game and was fined $1,000, and Sunday night in Kansas City Ed Badger, the Chicago Bulls' assistant coach, heaved a chair toward a fan after having been ejected from the game.

Tempers and frustrations appear to be exploding more often in pro basketball this season as players and coaches are openly revolting against referees' decisions.

Privately, many players and coaches in the National and American Basketball Associations agree that this is one of the worst seasons in officiating. Their feelings must remain private since they are subject to fines if they speak out publicly.

When the Nets defeated the Denver Nuggets in overtime recently, Loughery, the Nets' coach, who had been fined $1,750 and suspended for two games for his outburst during a game against the Virginia Squires, said his team would have won in regulation time had Mark Schlaflman not been the referee.

Loughery risked a fine with that statement. But after Dave DeBusschere, the A.B.A. commissioner, had watched a replay of the game, he did not fine him. Schlaflman worked the next Nets' game. At one point he warned New York for playing what he believed was

Seaver Will Be 'Surprised' if Mets Trade Him

Joe Frazier, the new manager of the New York Mets, leading his team in practice yesterday at St. Petersburg, Fla.

Hurler Defends Role in Dispute With Owners

By JOSEPH DURSO
ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 23—Tom Seaver replied to some public sniping today, insisted he was neither "militant" nor "reaching for the moon" and said he would be "realy surprised" if the New York Mets traded him.

"It's been a very emotional time for everybody involved," the 31-year-old pitcher said, referring to the prolonged legal dispute in baseball and his own contract problem with the Mets. "I have no doubt it'll all blow over, and while I think about this a lot, it doesn't affect my work. I don't bring my paycheck out on the field with me."

Seaver reviewed the tangled situation during a long interview while sitting on the grass at Huggins-Stengel Field, just after Manager Joe Frazier had put the Mets through their fifth workout of the "late spring."

It was less than three weeks until the opening of the regular season and, in all 24 training camps in Florida, California and Arizona, the countdown was hurrying along with exhibition games two days away. But the camps seemed somewhat subdued by the continuing struggle between the 600 players and the team owners over the "reserve system" and the possibility that everybody might become a free agent in the next two years.

During the 17-day shutdown of spring training, Seaver took an active role in the negotiations by the Players Association. He also served as "manager" of the camp-in-exile at Eckerd College where workouts were held informally by players from the Mets, Pittsburgh

The Angels Ask for an Arm and a Leg

HOLTVILLE, Calif., March 22—Across the Imperial Valley, the flat green fields of carrots stretch toward the purple mountains beyond the nearby Mexican border. This farming town is the "carrot capital" of the world. Bugs Bunny should train here instead of baseball players. But the California Angels always spend a week on the four diamonds of their minor league Angeltown Complex before putting on fancy clothes in Palm Springs for their exhibition games. This is a good place to get into condition because there isn't much else to do, not even in El Centro where the Angels are lodged.

Condition is particularly important to two Angels—to Nolan Ryan, the pitcher whose right arm underwent surgery for the removal of bone chips last year, and to Bobby Bonds, the outfielder whose right leg incurred knee damage last year. If the arm and the leg stay healthy, the Angels surely will terminate their two-year lease on the American League West basement apartment. With a big year, Bobby Bonds would embarrass the Yankees as much as Nolan Ryan has embarrassed the Mets.

"I consider Bobby Bonds one of the six best players in baseball," Dick Williams, the Angels' manager, was saying. "You don't usually get a player of that quality in a trade, but we did."

The other five in Williams' ranking, pitchers excluded, are Reggie Jackson of the Oakland A's, Cesar Cedeno of the Houston Astros and three members of the Cincinnati Reds—Johnny Bench, Joe Morgan and Pete Rose.

"The only other one in that group to be traded is Morgan," said Williams, "and we hope we made as good a deal as the Reds did."

'They Didn't Want Me'

The difference is that Bonds has been traded twice in two years. That's often a bad sign. When the Yankees obtained him in a swap for Bobby Murcer, they talked about him as a cornerstone of their future. But three months ago they traded him to the Angels for Mickey Rivers, a swift centerfielder, and Ed Figueroa, a 16-game winner.

"They traded me," said Bonds, awaiting his turn in the batting cage, "because they didn't want me. I don't know why. Billy Martin had even talked to me at the end of last season about what we would do in spring training this year."

Perhaps the Yankees believed Bonds's right-handed power would be diluted by the return to Yankee Stadium where left-centerfield is known as Death Valley. But he says, "I ain't seen a ball park yet that I can't hit a ball out of." Perhaps the Yankees were disenchanted by a drunk driving arrest, his second, but Babe Ruth drank, too. Perhaps the Yankees nored Bonds's knee too much of a risk but he doesn't.

"Dr. James Nichold told me I'll probably need an operation in five to seven years," Bonds said, "But I'm only planning on playing aboven more years anyway. Right now I feel I can do anything I did before I hurt the knee."

And perhaps the Yankees didn't want to be hassled by Bonds's request for a four-year contract. With the Angels, he recently signed a two-year contract. He has indicated that his salary is more than $172,000 that Frank Robinson, now the manager of the Cleveland Indians, received with the Angels two years ago. That would make Bobby Bonds the highest paid player in baseball.

"I asked Gabe Paul for four-year contract and he didn't seem annoyed," Bonds remembered. "He said, 'Let me think about it.' But the week I was traded."

Despite the knee ailment, Bonds occurred in early June, just when he was beginning by the Yankees with 20 homers, Bonds had 32 homers, 30 bases and drove in 88 runs with a 270 average as a adoff batter.

"He won't lead off for us," Williams said. "He'll bat third, fourth or fifth. I haven't ad which yet."

Extension Equa-locity

Not far away, Nolan Ryan on a green wooden bench and talked about the bone chips that required surgery even before last season had e. They were bothering him even when he pitched his h no-hitter, even when he had a 10-3 record with five outs in June, but he finished with a 14-12 record and only 186 strikeouts after having averaged 356 over three previous seasons.

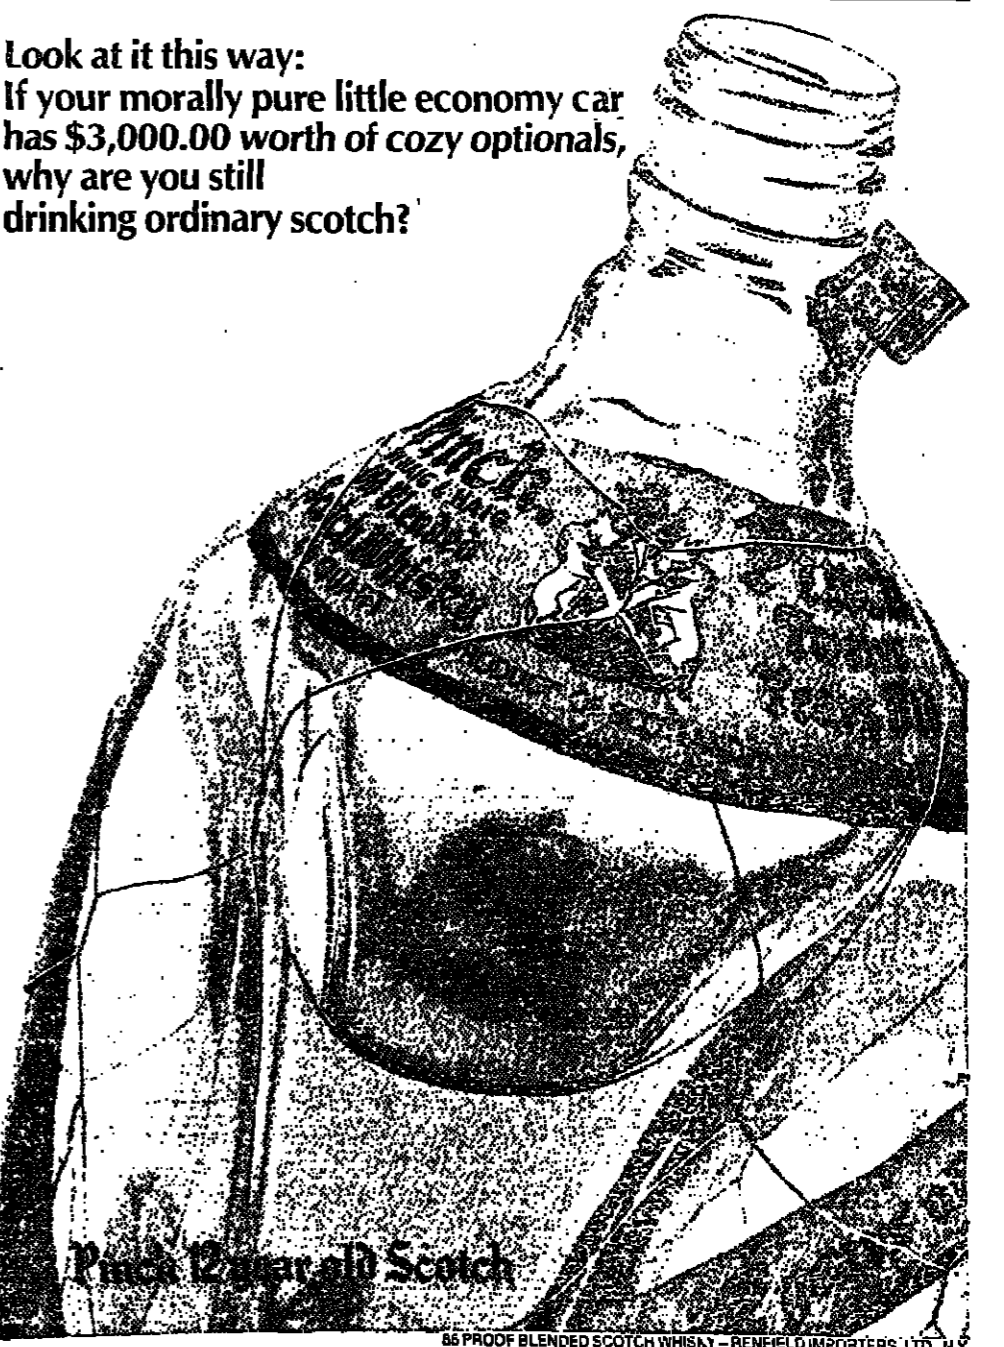

"My arm feels all right now, I got in great shape," the 29-year-old right-hander said. "But I don't know until I start throwing five or six innings 10 from now."

One of the bone chips, in the joint, restricted the extension of Ryan's arm. As a result it rted the velocity of his fastball, once timed at 100.8 needed the velocity. "I became a short-armed," Ryan exper hour.

"I became a short-armed," Ryan exper hour.

arm bent. "I get my velocity through the keeping his arm loose. And then as the game grew lo to get my dull throb in the back of my elbow. If my id have a think I'll have my best year. I'm a matu sound, I pitcher now. I've learned a lot. But if my amrrienced what it was last year I don't know. My cont back to last year. It had to be. I think I could pitch a better but I don't know."

All the Angels are asking for is an arm and two of the best in baseball.

It takes time to get to know guys, and I still haven't found their pulse." Opponents know where the Ranger pulse is, or went to other teams. Many equate the Ranger downfall with the trading of Vic Hadfield in 1974. The former Ranger captain, now with Pittsburgh, blames their collapse on "desperation" changes.

"The problem is that management made all those changes at once," Hadfield said. "They got rid of too many veterans at once and brought too many young guys in at once."

"That's what upset the whole team. And it destroyed the Ranger system." The Ranger system also seemed to include spirit, or heart, as some veterans call it. When Brad Park, the captain at the start of the season, was sent to the Bruins in the Esposito deal, when Ed Giacomin, a Ranger goalie for all his 10 years in the N.H.L., was "given away" to Detroit for the waiver fees, when popular Derek Sanderson was gotten rid of and when steady Jean Ratelle was dealt to the Bruins, the spirit of the Rangers seemed to dissolve.

than there have been in many, many seasons. What's happening is we have a varied interpretation of hand play by the officials. Some allow stronger hand usage and others are calling tighter games. It's impossible for the officials to be consistent the way the rule is written. They are being blamed because of those poor interpretations.

"I have asked that we go back to the daylight rule for next season. I would at least like for us to experiment with the rule during the exhibition season. It may be that it's too drastic, but it's better than what we're living with now."

John Nucata, the supervisor of N.B.A. officials, says that technical fouls are running about 12 percent behind last year's number. But the reason for the decrease, general managers, coaches and players agree, is that officials are learning to walk away from the irate players.

"The officials are not using the T the way they used to," said Newell. "It used to be a hammer to control the game. Now the officials are aware how costly they can be to a team."

The N.B.A. experimented with three instead of two officials during the exhibition season, but abandoned the idea as too costly. With players getting stronger and quicker, and the action more violent, the league may have no choice but to use three officials.

Benson, Indiana's Big Man Carrying an Extra Burden

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

Kent Benson's left wrist is wrapped in a plaster cast minutes after each Indiana basketball game, and the Hoosier lives with the heavy thing until it is cut off minutes before the next game.

College Sports Notes This has been the routine since the middle of the season, when the 6-10, 245-pound center fell and tore ligaments in the wrist during the 14th of Indiana's 30 victories.

During a game, Benson plays with the wrist taped and he is apparently in pain. Coach Bobby Knight speaks of the big man's playing with some pain, but Benson doesn't talk about it.

After the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball tournament, which ends in Philadelphia Monday night, Benson will decide whether to undergo surgery on the wrist. The chances are he will agree to it before his senior season starts next December.

Benson is an example of what Al McGuire, the Marquette coach, calls "new trends in recruiting." McGuire, whose team lost to undefeated Indiana in the N.C.A.A. Midwest Regional last Saturday, said: "Strong guys and long benches are the two new trends in basketball. I've always recruited those guys who could slip down a shower drain. I'll have to change, I guess, or get out."

Benson's injury does not seem to interfere with his play. He has played with a back injury and also while recovering from a broken foot. The cast will be removed again Saturday afternoon just before the Hoosiers go against the University of California, Los Angeles, in the N.C.A.A. semifinal round at Philadelphia's Spectrum.

Johnny Orr, Michigan's basketball coach, poked fun at the Atlantic Coast Conference, which prides itself on strong teams. "It's killing all those other..."

Ski Team Has Bumpy Landing

HUNTER, N.Y., March 22—The international World Cup skiing troupe, numbering 160 racers, coaches and trainers, suffered the indignity of having their luggage and equipment dumped in front of their hotel following their arrival here tonight after an eight-hour bus ride from Quebec.

The Canadian bus drivers considered the 100-yard-long driveway too steep for their vehicles. As a result, Toni Sailer, the former Olympics grand-slam winner and now the Austrian head coach, was seen dragging two sets of skis up the incline with an airlines bag draped around his neck.

There is speculation that the two additional games to be shown in New York will be those against Portland on June 12 and San Jose on Aug. 7. There are reports that the game against San Jose will be shown nationally by CBS.

In another development, MagnaVerde Productions has announced that it will continue its coverage of games via satellite this spring. The first live telecast can be seen this Sunday morning at the Academy of Music on East 14th Street in Manhattan. It will be an Italian League game between Juventus and Torino.

Senior Tennis Is Flourishing Locally

By CHARLES FRIEDMAN Senior tournament tennis (ages 45 to 70) is alive and vigorous in the metropolitan area, despite perennial complaints of aches and ailments among its participants.

Although Bobby Riggs, the nonpareil senior hustler, is one from New York, his old friends and rivals show up wherever there is competition. These days, most of it is at the Parade Grounds Tennis Center in Brooklyn, where Len Hartman, the owner, can tell the best stories about Riggs' legendary exploits.

The Eastern senior 45er championships are under way at the Parade Grounds, with players from Long Island, New Jersey, Westchester and Connecticut among the entries. Some show up with braces on arms and legs and look like hospital cases, but once they step on the court a transformation takes place.

zone defense, which is illegal in the A.B.A. Loughery yelled from the bench, "That can't be. Mark, you're not that smart!"

The N.B.A. will collect about $50,000 in fines through February and the A.B.A. $15,000. Of 450 technical fouls slapped on N.B.A. players and coaches, 45 have been handed to the Kansas City Kings, 41 to the Chicago Bulls and 40 to the Boston Celtics.

In the A.B.A., 200 technicals have been imposed. Loughery and Brown, the Kentucky Colonels coach, have more than 40 between them.

The game's increased speed and quickness, combined with a style of play different from previous years, are responsible in some measure for the problem. More than a decade ago, most teams' offenses revolved around the center. Today the offenses are designed to get all the players involved with picks and screens, often away from the ball. This has made officiating more difficult.

Pete Newell, general manager of the Los Angeles Lakers in an effort to protect Abdul-Jabbar from what he says is "constant harassment" by opposing players, is ready to return to the 1050's with a rule change.

"We have to go back to the old days," he said by telephone from Los Angeles, "when we had what we called the daylight rule. The offense sive man couldn't back in, and the official had to see daylight between the offensive and defensive man. The defensive man couldn't lean on the offensive man, as he is doing now."

"There are more fights at the post and more physical problems in the center area from further participation. Much of today's testimony tried to bolster the N.E.L. argument that Cook and Kapp had intended all along to launch a "million-dollar lawsuit" and that Kapp didn't really want to continue playing football.

On the other hand, Shula said, those in his top group—like Unitas—could bring a team of mediocre or ordinary talent up to championship quality.

He also said that Kapp's potential longevity was a "year-to-year" proposition because Kapp was "reckless" in his style, running out of the protective pocket and challenging tacklers instead of running out of bounds or hitting the ground.

"I admired his courage," said Shula, "but I don't think that's the right style for a long National Football League career."

However, under cross-examination it was brought out that Shula's categories of quality did not correlate with the salaries paid to those particular players, nor did the top group—consisting of those he called capable of "lifting" a mediocre team—produce a disproportionate share of championships.

Television Agreement Is Reached by Cosmos

By ALEX YANNIS

Television is no longer a forbidden zone for the New York Cosmos. The soccer team announced agreements yesterday with Channels 9 and 47 to provide simultaneous telecasts of seven road games in English and Spanish, respectively.

Channel 9—WOR-TV in New York—will also be prepared to televise any post-season games in which the Cosmos are involved. Additionally, two other games will be brought to New York on network hookups. Plans on those two, the Cosmos said, would be finalized in the near future.

"This is the beginning of what we hope will be a warm relationship with television in New York," said Richard Alford, the Cosmos' director of marketing and television. "We are pleased with the response from advertisers."

Commenting on the financial agreement, Alford said: "We wish not to disclose that, but I can tell you we are not doing it for charity." Clive Toye, the president of the Cosmos, remarked on the arrangements: "This is certainly an important step in the growth of soccer. We are thrilled to be able to bring soccer into the homes of New York and to have sports fans see Pelé as often as possible."

Channel 9 will be free to broadcast any playoff games in which the Cosmos are involved, unless the North American Soccer League reaches an agreement with the playoffs. Alford explained.

The Channel 9 and 47 telecasts will begin April 13, when the Cosmos kick off the N.A.S.L. season in Miami. Other telecasts will originate from Hartford, Tampa, Minnesota, Washington, Philadelphia and Rochester. All, but the Tampa, Minnesota and Washington contests will be shown on a delayed basis.

There is speculation that the two additional games to be shown in New York will be those against Portland on June 12 and San Jose on Aug. 7. There are reports that the game against San Jose will be shown nationally by CBS.

In another development, MagnaVerde Productions has announced that it will continue its coverage of games via satellite this spring. The last two finalists for girls in doubles down in Florida," another added. "Bobby must have had a bet down."

Although seniors take pride in staying in shape and being able, like a boxer, to "go the distance," they have a nagging concern about the limits of their physical resources.

Until the rule was changed this year, a senior could be required to play two matches in a day by the tournament director. Many would be too tired and default the second.

Pirates, Detroit Tigers and Philadelphia Phillies.
Along the way, it became known that he had yanked a three-year contract for $300,000 and the Mets' management, stung by suggestions that he might play out his option, replied that it had "initiated" trade talks with half a dozen other clubs.
"My mail is about 50-50," Seaver said, when asked about public reaction to some press comments that had criticized him. "During the players' strike four years ago, it was much worse. I get a lot of people who tell me I make too much money, that playing is a glorified game of playing catch, which it isn't."
"I've got to go with my conviction, and it's too bad if you can't respect someone who stands up for what he thinks is right. There's no question about it, I'm not asking for the moon, not in the situation that exists today in professional sports. I'll probably talk to them in the next couple of days about my contract, and I'd really be surprised if they traded me, though I've said that their prerogative if they think it would help the team. But the real situation exists between us."
Seaver also disclosed that he intended to relinquish his duty as the player representative of the locker room and, as needed, alongside other "player reps" like Brooks Robinson, Joe Torre and Lou Piniella. But he denied that his decision had been prompted by the recent sniping at his performance.
"I decided to give up the rep sometime ago," he said. "I'll probably do it this year. It's nothing to do with the current situation, just takes too much time away from my family. I said that nobody should stay as a player representative if he couldn't attend the meetings. I didn't attend the meeting in Florida in December. I thought I was the 'Tom Terrific' baseball who won his third Young Award last season as best pitcher in the major league, also denied that his recent business activities, which included working in television sports broadcasting and regularly doing commercials for the clothing line of the Sears stores.

Phils Beat Tigers, 1-0, as They Play Ball!

LAKELAND, Fla., March 22 (AP)—Jerry Martin's sacrifice fly in the ninth inning gave the Philadelphia Phillies a 1-0 victory today over the Detroit Tigers in the first exhibition baseball game of the delayed spring training season.
Originally, Detroit was supposed to play Boston and Philadelphia had scheduled Minnesota. But much of the Grapefruit League season was canceled because of the contract dispute. Most of the other teams begin play Wednesday.
Hitters are supposed to be far ahead of pitchers at this time, but pitchers for both the Tigers and the Phillies were impressive. The winning rally, off a rookie Tiger hurler, Frank McCormick, began with a walk to a pinch-hitter, Tim McCarver. Terry Harmon, another pinch-hitter, followed with a hit-and-run single to right, sending McCarver to third. Martin's sacrifice fly followed.
Dan Bohitano of the Philadelphia Phillies (9-0) pitched the first two batters in the bottom of the ninth and gave up a loop single to Willie Horton to fill the bases. But the rookie then struck out Molano and Detroit's No. 1 draft choice, Steve Kemp, to end the game.
Jimmie Karpis pitched in a National League uniform and combined with Tom Schuele Tom Hoge and Bogtano to restrict the Tigers to one run.
Detroit's lineup included Roy McMillan, Joe Judge, Jim Bohannon, Jerry Koosman, and Ken Sanders.

Steinbrenner Cuts Yankee Longhairs difficulties with management in the past, was standing nearby and hurriedly explained to the boss that the youngster had just been catching and hadn't had a chance to fix his hat.

"I like to see a player look neat," Steinbrenner said later. "Maybe I'm wrong, but we'll see. I'll try to explain it to them at a meeting. They'll joke about it, but sooner or later we'll get it ingrained in them. We're starting it in our minor league system. The Yankee system isn't what it used to be and we've got to get it back to what it was."
It didn't seem likely that the players would stage an insurrection over the matter, but some conceded some practical upsets players.
"A lot of guys don't like players with long hair," said a neat-looking Lyle, who spent $50 to have his hair curled but still has to have it cut shorter. "But do you ever remember when an owner made the rule? Usually it's the manager. The big thing is, a lot of guys came in much better groomed than in other years. They came in and found out they still had to get their hair cut. That's when they didn't like it."
"It's a big thing for him, but not for other people," Dick Tidrow said of Steinbrenner and Lyle. "I guess it's his team. He can make us look like he wants."
Even Oscar Gamble, who had baseball's fullest Afro, 10 inches high, until it was drastically shorn yesterday.
When Steinbrenner saw Gamble at the batting cage today, he walked over to him. "Good haircut," the boss said, smiling.
When Steinbrenner entered the clubhouse, he tore the inspection sign down and threw it away, but he left the other on the board.
Out on the field during batting practice, Lyle shouted for all to hear, "Piniella, the toes on those shoes are not shined."
In the dugout, a young catcher from the minor league camp for the day was getting some water. He wore his cap catcher style, with the brim at the back. Steinbrenner walked over and turned his cap around. Dock Ellis, who had his own difficulties with management in the past, was standing nearby and hurriedly explained to the boss that the youngster had just been catching and hadn't had a chance to fix his hat.

Green Thought in a Green Shade

By ANATOLE BROYARD

GENIUS OF THE PLACE. The English Garden, 1620-1820. By John Dixon Hunt and Peter Willis. 300 pages. Illustrated. Harper & Row, $25.

Andrew Marvell's "Green Thought in a Green Shade" would not do for us today as we think in "tanks." Besides, nature is many of us nervous, unless we are swimming pool or a tennis court. I find it a less profound purpose than simply being there. The Bible says we have a life in a garden, and some of us end it in another one, the Elysian fields of heaven. In the interval, we have pachysandra, our tree-lined streets, window boxes, our flower pots, our herbaceous perennials.

You have "The Genius of the Place," John Dixon Hunt and Peter Willis, and you own the idea of the thing. And it is an idea it is, to write a social and cultural history of man by approaching through his garden. The subtitle of the book is "The English Landscape Garden 1620-1820," but, as one of their forefathers says of a well-designed landscape, "the emotion often spreads far and wide."

"The Genius of the Place" is an illustrated anthology of theories of landscape gardening, descriptions of famous gardens and poems celebrating them. For Alexander Pope, who had a splendid one, his garden conducted to "the Feast of Reason, the Flow of Soul." In his poem "The Garden," James Thomson celebrates a garden as the place where "... all the passions of the human mind, by various Passions, sink away."

Stiff and Unnatural. The garden next became an arena where a "liberty" struggled against French absolutism. When the Western world was "enlightened by Le Nôtre's 'miracle'" at Versailles, the garden began to be regarded as an expression of the owner's personality. Ambitious landscapes—a pretty garden—were designed to be "read" upon: here one meditated; there one talked with the tender sex; farther on, suitable melancholy, an intimation of mortality, was encouraged. Water was made to rain, roar, purr or mirror. A strategically placed ruin "excited an inquiry into the former state of the edifice," bringing to mind "the fleeting Forms of Things, the Decay even of this our Globe."

variety." Like Jean Cocteau, who said, "The nightingale sings badly," men tried to improve on nature, to "collect and epitomize" its attractions.

The serpentine became a positive obsession at one time, according to Mr. Hunt and Mr. Willis, and a stream flowing in a straight line was abhorrent to the eye. Like adolescents rejecting their uncultivated parents, some of the gentry would have nothing to do with rude nature, with its "warts and boils," even its uncovered "puenda," as one writer put it.

In "The Genius of the Place" there are "heroic" gardens that suggest "the great and extraordinary" in nature and pastoral ones "abandoned to caprice." In Thomas Whately's view, the idea "should seem to be suggested by the scene... not sought for, not labored, and have the force of a metaphor, free from the detail of an allegory." If allowed to go unchecked, the Continental passion for horticultural allusion might reduce the garden to a recordable communitarian and leave no scope for the "personal reverie" that seems to have formed a part of the country gentleman's exercise.

Debate Over Purpose

According to William Empson, the chief point of Marvell's poem "The Garden" is "to contrast and reconcile conscious and unconscious states, intuitive and intellectual modes of apprehension..." And this is where the debate raged. Should a garden simply "alert the senses" to nature, enable us to see it enhanced, with pristine eyes—or is the garden only a theater for stately, temples, ruins, "mounds," grotesques, mottos, mazes, follies, hermitages and other emblematic inventions? Homer, Virgil, Horace, Spenser, Milton—even John Locke's "Essay Concerning Human Understanding"—were all invoked on one side or the other.

The many illustrations in the "The Genius of the Place" run the gamut from austere diagrams of gardens with trees planted like the "patches" worn by court ladies to the décolletage of unconcealed nature. The book is one of those happy inspirations that find in obscure manuscripts, drawings and paintings all the concrete ideas and antic impulses that are too often absent from social history. It shows men trying to come to terms with their conception of themselves and their world right in their own backyard.

The quoted passages and poems, which are printed in their original spelling, are in themselves a "delicate and diligent curiosity," documenting the author's various "complexions of soul." For each extract, Mr. Hunt and Mr. Willis have provided a witty and instructive introduction, as well as a general introduction that is a masterpiece of elegant compactness. Here is a mere part of a sentence that illustrates the taste they bring to the entire enterprise: "... only after the Fall did man have to invoke art to shore a damaged nature."

Principal Is Suspended For Disobeying an Order

By LEONARD BUDEK

A Queens high school principal with a reputation for being a strict disciplinarian was suspended yesterday by School Chancellor Irving Anker after the principal had refused to comply with the board's orders to readmit a student he had suspended for misbehavior.

The principal, Howard L. Hurwitz of Long Island City High School, was directed to report to Board of Education headquarters this morning pending the outcome of charges of unbecoming conduct, violating board regulations and insubordination. He will continue to receive his $35,000-a-year salary in the meantime.

Mr. Anker, a former high school principal himself, said that the action taken against Dr. Hurwitz was very uncommon. But, he added: "This was the first time in the history of the city system, to my knowledge, that a high school principal specifically and repeatedly defied a superintendent's orders."

Dr. Hurwitz attacked the Chancellor's action as "mindless" and "disastrous to the school system." "How can you remove a principal like me," he said, "who stood for discipline and learning, because I have refused to obey an order to readmit a girl who I say poses a danger to other students and the teachers?"

He added that the student, who is nearly 17 years of age, was "totally defiant and uncontrollable."

Dr. Hurwitz said he had no intention of reporting to board headquarters as directed. "I am going to stay right here," he said, speaking from the principal's office. "And there will be thousands of people in the streets tomorrow [Tuesday] to support me."

Dr. Hurwitz said that the instructions he had received to readmit the student, which came from Assistant Superintendent Abraham Wilner, were "arbitrary and capricious" and jeopardized his authority as principal. He added that he had given the suspended student "due process" and that he had arranged for her to transfer to another school. But headquarters officials said that Dr. Hurwitz had not followed proper procedures in suspending the student and had repeatedly refused orders to readmit her.

"If we are to expect our students to obey the law and follow proper procedures," Mr. Anker said, "then we can insist on no less from our principals."

Dr. Hurwitz, who is 60 years old, has been in the school system since 1938. During his 10 years as principal of Long Island City, the high school became known as a strict but relatively safe school and Dr. Hurwitz developed a reputation among parents and others in the community as a tough disciplinarian.

On Hectoring Allies

The prospect of Communist participation in coalition governments of Italy and France is a legitimate concern for other members of NATO, particularly the United States. Despite a degree of independence of the Kremlin, demonstrated for years by the Italian party and in recent months by its French counterpart, Communist sharing in national power carries risks for the democratic systems of the two countries as well as for the alliance.

There is every reason for the United States and the other allies to make their concern about these risks clear to the governments in Rome and Paris as well as to all the democratic parties of the two countries. But to issue a steady stream of public warnings to France and Italy of the dire consequences that will follow any entry of the Communists into government—admonitions of the kind delivered recently by President Ford, Secretary of State Kissinger and Gen. Alexander Haig—can only play into the hands of the Communists and make it more difficult to keep them out.

No country enjoys being lectured to by outsiders on how to cope with its problems. No Government under the political and economic pressures that beset Prime Minister Aldo Moro's minority administration in Italy is likely to be grateful for foreign advice delivered in public—especially when the success of its new anti-inflation and recovery program depends heavily on Communist suzerainty, if not on Communist participation.

When resentment against such uninvited foreign advice reaches a certain level, politicians usually friendly to the United States take over from the Communists in denouncing it, as the recent blasts against American intervention by French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac and Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues illustrate.

In reiterating his warning of the Communist threats to Italy and France in his recent Boston speech, Secretary Kissinger conceded that "ultimately, of course, the decision must be made by the voters of the countries concerned." They are probably more likely to make the wisest decision if the United States and other allied governments stop telling them publicly and incessantly what it ought to be.

Britain's Initiative

Britain has unexpectedly launched a fresh initiative aimed at producing a constitutional settlement in Rhodesia and heading off racial war in southern Africa—but with no great hope that its proposals will be accepted by Rhodesia's white minority Government. As Foreign Minister James Callaghan told Parliament, the contradictory utterances by Prime Minister Ian Smith "give very little room for believing that one can negotiate with him."

About the only hope rests on the fact that, after rejecting any British jurisdiction since he declared Rhodesia's independence from London in 1965, Mr. Smith last week urged the British to re-enter the discussions "and accept the responsibility which they claim they have." Unfortunately, Mr. Smith also said over the weekend that he would never hand over power to the black majority—"not even in a thousand years."

A prompt transition to majority rule is the only solution acceptable to black nationalists, the only commitment that has any chance of persuading the more militant of them to call off the guerrilla warfare they are waging from bases in Mozambique. Britain's plan calls for immediate acceptance of the principle of majority rule and elections leading to a majority government in 18 months to two years.

Mr. Callaghan promised British assistance, which he hopes would be augmented by aid from the European Community and the Commonwealth, for development, education and other Rhodesian needs. The United States, still on the defensive with most black African governments for breaching the United Nations sanctions against Rhodesia, could recoup some of its standing by coming out solidly in support of the British proposals and offering to join in assisting a new majority in Salisbury.

The prospects that Mr. Smith or any likely white successor will accept Britain's proposed timetable are anything but bright. But the stakes are so great in southern Africa and the cost of failure is likely to be so catastrophic that Britain deserves support in this latest, desperate effort.

Offshore Challenge

When California voters passed the highly publicized "Proposition 20" nearly four years ago, they had every right to think they were creating the first really effective coastal planning body in the nation. What they could not foresee was that at the first major opportunity, the oil industry would scorn that body—and in doing so enjoy Department of the Interior backing.

When the Exxon Corporation proposed a $20 million complex near Santa Barbara to handle the oil production of an off-shore lease, the state's Coastal Zone Conservation Commission withheld its permit in favor of a better plan. In view of the number of approved operations in the area, it proposed instead a consolidation of on-shore facilities—such as storage tanks and plants for removing brine from crude oil—and perhaps a joint pipeline to existing refineries in Los Angeles.

That kind of planning, which the companies could not be expected to initiate, is precisely the function for which the commission was created. But Exxon's initial response was that, rather than comply, it would do all its processing at sea, beyond the state's jurisdiction, and pump oil onto tankers for shipment to refineries. The transfer of oil at sea is an environmentally dangerous operation, involving a degree of leakage that has a cumulative effect on the shore more deadly than occasional dramatic spills. Exxon subsequently decided to try getting its on-shore way by raising technicalities in the courts, where it may yet prevail. Meanwhile, the prospect of oil processing at sea still threatens the coast.

Whether or not the commission's decision was sound, it had a right to make it. Even more, it had a right to expect the backing of the Interior Department, which has so often promised to harmonize the taking of off-shore oil with the environmental policies of the affected states. However, Under Secretary Kent Frizzell has gratuitously warned that whether Exxon accepts the commission's plan or evades it, the department will not withdraw its approval of the operation.

Congress is now considering measures to give the states a stronger hand in controlling the impact of off-shore oil. If further evidence were needed to point up the merits of such legislation, it has been furnished by Exxon and underscored by the Interior Department.

City Underground

The decision of Union Carbide to move its corporate headquarters to Connecticut is a grave reflection of the illness afflicting New York. Unless this city can provide firm evidence that it is putting its fiscal house in order and at the same time restoring the decencies of urban life, the productive base on which it depends for jobs and tax revenue will be irreparably injured.

The most immediate test of New York's will and capacity is the negotiation now under way for a new transit wage agreement. If another devastating strike marks the April 1 contract deadline, the efforts of Mayor Beame and Governor Carey to reverse the outflow of jobs will suffer a catastrophic setback.

But the damage will be no less great if the Metropolitan Transportation Authority commits itself to an agreement calling for any increase in wages or fringe benefits. Such an accord would have to be reflected in a higher subway and bus fare or a further reduction in transit service, and perhaps in both. This battered city cannot afford either form of punishment for subway riders, tens of thousands of whom work for wages only barely above the welfare level.

Nor can the city afford the pattern-setting impact of higher transit pay on the wages of police, fire, sanitation and most other municipal employees, whose contracts expire June 30. Even if written into new pacts on a deferred basis, another round of pay increases would put a heavy mortgage on the city's future and postpone indefinitely the day when it could hope to restore solvency.

...Don't Bury It...

Whether or not New York were in such desperate financial straits, there would be no compelling argument for higher transit pay in the next two years, despite the case to the contrary made by economists for the Transport Workers Union. The exhaustive analysis yesterday by the Mayor's Temporary Commission on City Finances shows that transit labor costs—which account for $5 out of every $6 spent on operating the subways and buses—went up by 180.5 percent in the last decade, as against a 76.7 percent increase in living costs for New York City.

The basic average earnings of transit workers now stand at $13,700; but extra pay, city-financed pensions, free optical and dental care and other benefits increase that average by more than half, bringing the annual cost of maintaining the average employee to $20,787, exclusive of cost-of-living adjustments.

The time has come to stop an endless upward climb in costs, fares and deficits—all accompanied by a dismaying drop in riders. The commission has some admirable suggestions for reversing that trend, but all of them depend on holding the line in the current negotiations.

The key does not lie with the M.T.A. nor with the three fact-finders who have entered the case under the procedures of the state's Taylor Law, prohibiting civil service strikes. It rests with the Mayor, the Governor and the Emergency Financial Control Board.

The negotiations and the fact-finding are a mockery in the absence of any clear statement by the control board on the realities of the city's finances and the impossibility of undertaking any rise in labor costs. To say the board will review whatever comes out of the contract talks is to pretend that anyone on either side of the bargaining table is in any independent position to make a judgment.

The status of the agreement between the Board of Education and the United Federation of Teachers—still in limbo six months after it emerged from a pointless school strike—underscores the fictitious character and the peril of going through the motions of collective bargaining when the real decision-makers are not only absent but silent.

...Social Security Out?

Mayor Beame may be playing political poker with the tight-fisted dispensers of urban aid in Washington as he files two-year notice of the city's intention to quit the Social Security System. But bluff could well turn into reality if constructive action is not taken this year to reduce the staggering burden of civil service retirement costs on the taxpayers of New York City and State.

New York City could save an estimated $200 million a year if it stopped paying the current 5.85 percent employer contribution for its workers, who are already covered by separate municipal pension programs and in some cases by city-subsidized annuities as well.

For the city's employees, the cessation of Social Security would put back into their pay envelopes the 5.85 percent now automatically deducted as their share of the cost of retirement protection—a saving likely to have attraction for workers as well as budget-balancers.

The wiser option, however, would be the one recommended to Governor Carey and the State Legislature last week by the Permanent Commission on Public Employee Pension Systems, headed by Otto Kinzel. The commission would reduce the ruinous expense of retirement protection for New York City and State workers through a program integrating the public benefits with Social Security. Unless something of that sort is done, the Beame proposal may in fact be the only way out two years hence.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:
For more than two months the Board of Estimate has failed to act on New York City's second-year proposed Community Development Program. As a result, $102 million in desperately needed money is sitting idly in the U.S. Treasury. This dreary development comes on top of the fact that only $20 million of last year's $100 million in Community Development grants has actually been spent. This sluggish financial behavior hardly seems appropriate for a city flirting with bankruptcy.

Community Development funds are in effect the replacement for the city's capital budget and, therefore, the only source of funds for any new construction. Responsibility for developing and executing the Community Development Program is spread among fifteen city agencies. The competition for the money is understandably fierce at the borough and community level.

One would have hoped that Mayor Beame would by now have exerted some direction and leadership to minimize the confusion. Instead, his departments go their separate ways with representatives wandering in and out of the Board of Estimate hearings answering board questions and confirming the absence of any direction or central responsibility for the program.

The Community Development statements will continue until Mayor Beame exerts his influence over, or at least designates someone to be in charge of, how the city ought to spend this substantial sum of money. In the meantime the situation is an outrage. Not only is the city not spending badly needed money, it is presenting solid evidence which the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Congress could use to cut back future allocations for New York City on the grounds that the city cannot spend what it is already entitled to.

... And a Lot of Putty

To the Editor:
I had just vowed to stop writing letters of outrage when I saw an item in the paper that announced a Federal grant of $1 million to New York City to hire eighty people to "weatherize" apartments in low-income neighborhoods. These people will putty windows, clean boilers and insulate rooms for one year. Their salaries will range from $6,150 to $8,500. It is, of course, admirable to get people off the unemployment lines, but at what cost?

If each of the 80 workers made the maximum salary, the total cost of the program would be $680,000. That leaves $320,000 for program administration, or $4,000 per employee. But each person will not receive the maximum, so taking an average salary of $7,325, the program will cost the taxpayers $586,000 for eighty real jobs. This means it will cost $5,175 to administer each $7,325 job—a rate of 70 percent.

The $414,000 administration cost would pay the salaries of 56 more weatherizers and still leave $3,800 for putty. That's a lot of putty.

Mideast: The Arabs' Mistreated Brethren

To the Editor:
In a recent letter, Subell S. Namari says the Palestinians are denied the "simple human right . . . to be able to live in peace in their own homes." How, this statement begs the question: Has there ever been a poll of these people? There is no means of democratic expression anywhere in the Arab world. Should we assume that the self-anointed terrorist leaders and the autocratic rulers are the true reflections of popular opinion?

The vast majority of the Palestinians have never resided in Israel. Their elders abandoned Israel to the invading Arab hordes almost thirty years ago. The invaders encouraged them to leave and live among their "own people." Those who are so concerned for them have confined them to camps and have made them objects of international charity. This in the face of the enormous wealth of the "concerned."

Why have these "concerned" governments so mistreated their "refugee" brethren? Is it not because they also mistreat their own natives? We must judge these spokesmen by what they do and not by their pious expressions. Israel has offered compensation as one means of resolving a problem which is being relentlessly exacerbated by hosts who provide no welcome. Israel, justly fears, the total absorption of a population of indoctrinated enemies. Why are these "refugees" so anxious to leave the lands of their brethren? Is life in Israel a more desirable prospect? I. LEWIS GORDON

Sadat's Deal

To the Editor:
The Times editorial of March 14 reflects a distortion of history which is difficult to understand. Your statement that President Sadat could be accused by his Arab critics of "receiving nothing in return" for his policy of moderation is illogical. Do you call getting back from Israel the oil fields and the two strategic Sinai passes nothing? And what did Sadat give in exchange—a mere promise not to start a war for three years. Hardly a bad deal for Sadat.

On the other hand, could the delivery of six transport planes be meaningful enough for him to really silence his critics? Or is this just the beginning of more substantial weaponry to come, which is what he was really promised. Since the latter is more likely, then Prime Minister Rabin is justified to fear the tip of this iceberg. His own critics are hounding him for making a bad deal and his political life is at stake. American weaponry to Egypt would make the deal even more one-sided and could be fateful for Rabin and Israel as well.

Law of the Sea: An Untimely U.S. Bill

To the Editor:
Your Feb. 5 editorial praising the Senate for passage of the 200-mile fishing bill completely misunderstands the relationship between such legislation and the Third United Nations Conference on Law of the Sea, which resumed in New York this week.

Over the last decade, in its fight to preserve international rights (many of which are of major importance to this country, including freedom of navigation and the freedom to undertake scientific research, to name but two examples), the United States has consistently cautioned the international community against such unilateral encroachments, pointing out not only their illegality under international law, but the impetus such encroachments provide to the already strong move on the part of many coastal states toward claims of total sovereignty over broad bands of coastal waters. A universal 200-mile zone would, after all, include some 35 percent of all ocean space. If the President signs the 200-mile bill that is likely soon to be reported out by a House-Senate conference committee, the United States will now have gone and done it itself, and it matters not that the effective date of the bill is delayed six months, twelve months or eighteen months, the damage will have been done.

An effective argument can be made that the threat of such legislation (a similar threat still exists insofar as the deep-sea-mining bill is concerned), keeping pressure on the international community to come in with a comprehensive treaty on all aspects of law of the sea, has been a good thing. While passage of the 200-mile bill by the Senate in and of itself may already have lessened the effectiveness of the U.S. negotiating position at the conference, the slender thread that still supports the sword of Damocles might well be retained if, in the wisdom of the House-Senate conferees, the bill is contained in conference while the negotiators in New York engage in their third and most serious session during the next eight weeks. Since the 200-mile bill will undoubtedly have some form of delayed effective date in any case, it is hard to understand why any fish that might otherwise have been conserved will be injured thereby.

Wallace, Reagan At Bay

By Tom Wicker

LOTTE, N. C., March 21—On a weekend before the North primary, residents of this town almost unanimously gathered for to listen to Presidential candidates. The basketball team of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, unknown by most of the town, was playing—and barely losing the finals of the National Invitational tournament.

At the Presidential primary, the town barely had caught this attention, despite ample press and the presence of actor Stewart to back up the Ronald Reagan campaign, which needs it. Mr. Reagan appears to be, on his own, curiously, he is insisting at the top that he won't, he positively drops out of the race, which serves to remind everyone that lost every primary so far and red to lose this one, too.

After Ford's victory here would Mr. Reagan no state primaries he could plausibly expect a before May, and even then will be little reason to suppose he can do in Indiana, Nebraska, Virginia, Maryland, what he was to do in New Hampshire, Illinois or here. Undoubtedly, I win some delegates in the states, but he can hardly hope nomination unless he can the ability to defeat Mr. Ford here—and before the California primary on June 8.

THE NATION

Mr. Ford into a harder line, or maintain high-level military titles, or at least alert the to the dangers they proclaim. Social conservatives among Mr. s backers and contributors are insisting that he could through at some point of a losing political campaign will come an ideological liability. Democratic side, the George campaign is turning mean, cool and gentlemanly Wallace weeks ago now calling Jimmy "liar." This is an admission that Mr. Wallace knows a trouble, facing his third defeat by Mr. Carter, and extinction as the national force he used to be.

Justly unflappable, Mr. Carter need here in his usual low-key manner, contenting himself with that he ever made the 1972 "deal" with Mr. Wallace about the latter now says Mr. Carter carried in 1972 with more than 50 percent of the Democratic vote. Mr. Carter made a flat pledge to support black leaders in Durham, whom asked him if he would any blacks with you to the Bill. Mr. Carter answered with satisfaction. He also promised to "let" a black for Vice President, and he wouldn't promise to accept running mate.

After victory in North Carolina, and his victories over Mr. Wallace in Florida and in the South Carolinas, may well underline concerning facts about the Carter government.

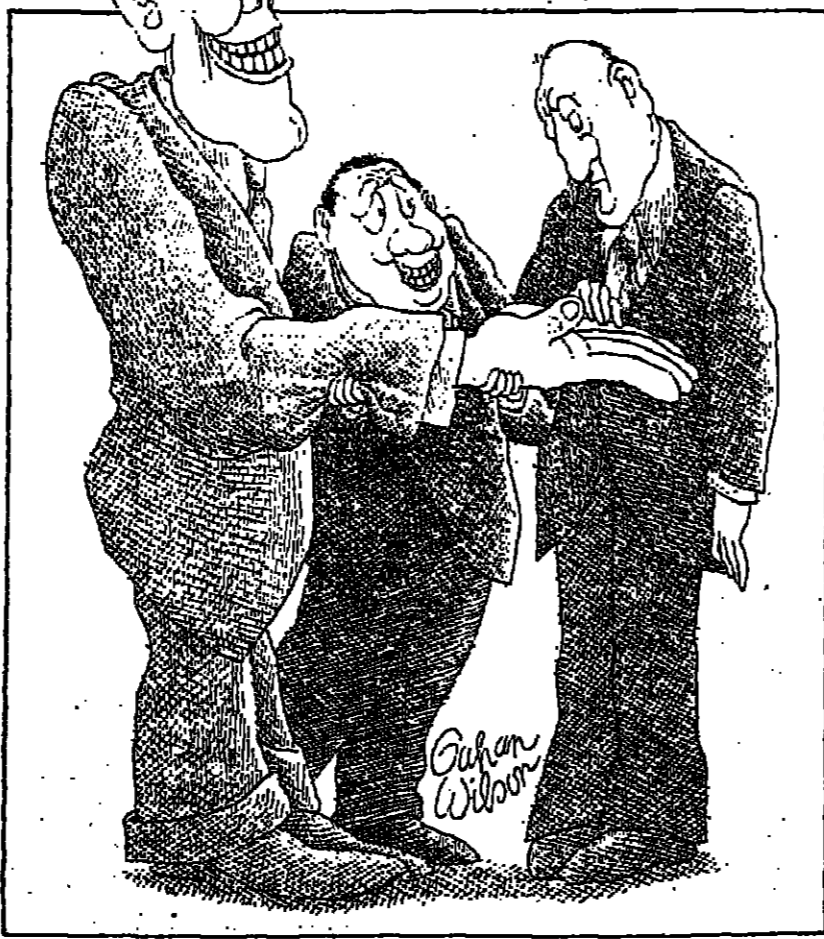

In Florida, he got 72 percent of the black vote, and he will win percentage of black voters in Florida. In Florida, Mr. Carter also a second choice of most Wallace voters, and in Illinois he won half those who told interviewers. The New York Times/CBS at they thought the Government had too much attention to es. Mr. Wallace's attacks will Wallace voters bitterly against in North Carolina remains even. If not, it may begin to some Democrats that a moderate who can win black the North and South without g Wallace voters in either say have more to offer than ally recognized.

But he able to win numerous states, for example, against ord as well as against George He might come nearer bringing Wallace voters back toocratic fold, without sacrific votes, than Henry Jackson d those are two things the ts will have to do if they are 1976 and build a party that on winning.

y, Mr. Carter can never be of lacking confidence. He was at the Durham meeting of ders that in 1975 Morehouse a black institution in Atlanta, him an honorary Doctor of rter said he remembered it lan to be the first Morehouse he White House," he said.

Dogging Fat Cats No More

By Harold Willens

LOS ANGELES—This Presidential primary season marks the first time since 1968 that I won't be on the prowl for fellow fat cats.

The recent Supreme Court campaign-finance rulings sounded the death knell for my kind of fundraising and for the country's sake I was glad to hear the bell toll. But I must admit to mixed personal feelings about staying out of the action.

On the one hand, no one knows better than I that political fundraisers are about as popular as proctologists and that their work is about as pleasant; on the other hand, when the cause is a crusade there is—or was—challenge in the chase and psychic reward in the catch.

During a New York dinner meeting in 1972, for example, a major film actor watched me extract $1 million for the McGovern campaign from a small group of wealthy people. The contributions ranged from $10,000 to $200,000 each. The actor said afterward that he had seen me "ennoble" a process he had previously regarded as inherently sordid and degrading.

The highest praise that can come to a fundraiser is praise that comes from a donor. In the 1968 McCarthy campaign, I made my first big-money pitch to a group of twelve affluent prospects who all responded with contributions of $25,000 or more. One of the participants was a New York investment banker. When the meeting ended, the man, who gave $50,000, told me: "I had decided that $5,000 would be my limit, but your words added a zero; thanks for prompting me to do the right thing." Such words, exceed-

The telephone rings constantly these days. Everybody wants advice. One moment it's Morris Udall. "This is Morris Udall," he says. "Udall, I tell him, 'I'm a busy man. I've got Ronald Reagan on 'hold' and Fred Harris trying to get me to accept a long-distance call collect, so I'm going to give it to you short and sweet and I'm just going to say it once."

I tell Udall he has to be more Lincoln-esque. Start wearing a shawl, a stovepipe hat, writing speeches on old envelopes, look sad and come out against slavery. I tell him I have been reading the political writers who say he doesn't seem to want it enough, that he doesn't have fire in the belly and an instinct for the jugular.

"You've got to show them you want it enough, Udall, I tell him, I advise Udall to slash the jugular of the very next political writer he meets. This will make everybody say he has fire in the belly and wants it enough.

"Won't that conflict with my Lincoln-esque image?" he asks. I hang up on him. I haven't time to answer nagging questions of detail. Henry Jackson has already shoved Reagan off the "hold" button. "This is Scoop Jackson," he says. Before he finishes the sentence, I am asleep.

Foresightedly, I have hired an assistant for these emergencies. His job is to wake me up within five seconds after Jackson has started talking and also, when President Ford calls, to telephone the Secret Service immediately on another line and alert them when Ford hits himself in the ear with the mouthpiece. He wakes me from Jackson.

I tell Jackson he is not using Daniel Patrick Moynihan right. "What you've got to do is keep Moynihan hunkered down behind you so nobody will see he's there. Let Moynihan do all the talking while you move your lips in condition, since he had already given generously to the McGovern campaign, that he would not be expected to make a contribution. The fire within me burned exceptionally bright that evening. My message was general, but it was meant for him, since I had to assume that he was the only genuine big-money prospect there. When I sensed that sparks were taking hold I paused. As though we had rehearsed it, he stood, made some moving comments—and a $50,000 pledge (paid the next day). His warmth radiated to others and suddenly we had over $200,000. It was a moment of ecstasy.

When Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey defeated Eugene McCarthy for the Democratic nomination in 1968, a friend of Mr. Humphrey asked me to meet with "our party's Presidential candidate." In a private one-hour conversation, Mr. Humphrey repeatedly urged me to join his fundraising team "on faith" while I repeatedly explained that only for an openly antiwar candidate could I again undertake the demeaning and debilitating money chase in which I had recently lost weight, strength and self-respect. Our discussion ended, and I retired from big-ticket political fundraising.

My decision to do it again four years later reflected the fact that the McGovern campaign became another chapter in the antiwar crusade. As in 1968, I cringed for the candidate when we would drag him through the dung heap of fundraising antics and charades, awaken him from desperately needed sleep for a bleary-eyed breakfast with a few fat cats, march others in late at night to "chat" with a candidate close to collapse, or put him through a photographic musical chairs routine at a fat-cat function so that pictures with warm personal notes could be sent to dozens, or hundreds, of potential contributors.

The Supreme Court rulings mark a historic step away from this kind of disgusting and distracting process—a process that unquestionably deters people of excellence from running for public office. As one who yearns to join the rest of the country in bidding a final farewell to fundraising, I fervently hope that this proves to be a first step toward the only kind of elections that can be called democratic by contemporary standards: elections financed by all the people rather than by a small minority. That would cost less than one-tenth of 1 percent of our Federal budget. It would be a low-cost high-yield investment in a better chance to get better people to spend the other 99.9 percent for us.

Harold Willens is chairman of a textile-machinery company. In the current campaign, he says, he has given a total of about $5,500 to four candidates.

More Drift for Britain?

By Graham Hovey

Harold Wilson's surprising decision to step down at 60 as Prime Minister and leader of the Labor Party has inevitably kindled hopes for a major recasting of British politics. Those hopes will almost certainly be disappointed.

On the surface, Britain seems ripe for political change, even realignment. Despite Mr. Wilson's claim that the country has turned a corner in the fight against inflation, his successor will face a hard slog without a dependable parliamentary majority or guarantees of trade union support.

Only six days before Mr. Wilson's announcement, the Government's precarious position in the House of Commons was dramatized when it lost a vote on its proposals for drastic cuts in public spending because 37 left-wing Labor rebels abstained. So much for Mr. Wilson's claim for his party last week that "we have had much less quarreling of late; we are much more united."

As for the reluctant union backing for anti-inflation measures thus far, it rests heavily on a personal relationship of trust between Mr. Wilson and Jack Jones of the powerful Transport and General Workers. Mr. Wilson's successor may find it impossible to maintain this emente, especially if stricter wage controls are required.

If the Parliamentary Labor Party were to elect a leader less acceptable than Mr. Wilson both to its left wing and to major union chiefs, it is not difficult to envision larger and more frequent defections on key Commons votes and serious trouble on the industrial front. Either development could bring down the Government, particularly if forecasts that 1.5 million workers will be unemployed by the end of 1976 prove accurate.

Many Britons in and outside the Labor Party would welcome a showdown between Mr. Wilson's successor and Labor's left-wing minority, especially if it gave promise of forcing the realignment they have long desired. Their main criticism of Mr. Wilson was that he invariably put party unity—meaning appeasement of the left—ahead of effective government.

The scenario for realignment calls for lopping off Labor's largely Marxist, hard-core left wing and then merging the party's social democratic majority with the forces that amassed more than six million votes—nearly one in every five cast—for the Liberal Party in February 1974.

It is an unusually attractive scenario at present, with the Liberal Party wracked by a bitter leadership crisis certain to cost it support, and the Conservative Party, under its new leader, Margaret Thatcher, moving to the right on economic issues—away from the more moderate policies pursued under all its postwar leaders from Churchill through Edward Heath.

Most Labor Members of Parliament who would relish a showdown with the hard-core left, and who would try to attract Liberal and progressive Tory voters as part of an effort to recast their party in a Western European social democratic mold, will vote for Home Secretary Roy Jenkins as Mr. Wilson's successor.

With his strong commitment to the European Community, his pragmatic approach to social and economic reform and his accomplishments in office, Mr. Jenkins at 55 is clearly the Labor minister with the greatest appeal to the right wing of his own party, to Liberals and to left-wing Tories. But he is anathema to Labor's left wing and regarded with suspicion in union circles.

If Mr. Jenkins is eliminated at some point and the choice narrows in the pattern generally expected, his backers will finally vote for Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey over Foreign Secretary James Callaghan. They will do so with greater enthusiasm since Mr. Healey's recent attack on the left-wing defectors in Commons.

But Mr. Callaghan—"Sunny Jim" from Cardiff, liked by everyone, capable of a flexibility on some issues that would do credit to Harold Wilson, and with some of Mr. Wilson's talent for papering over or simply ignoring the cracks in party unity—remains the man most likely to succeed. He is trusted by the unions. And the Labor left, after casting early votes for Tony Benn or Michael Foot, will back Mr. Callaghan as infinitely preferable to Mr. Jenkins or Mr. Healey.

If it happens, Mr. Callaghan's election as party leader—and hence his designation by the Queen as Prime Minister shortly after his 64th birthday—will mean not strong leadership in the continuing British crisis but muddling through. It will be an interim solution for the Labor Party, postponing yet again the day of reckoning for a political organism held together mostly by dislike of the Tory opposition.

Given all the political facts of life in Britain, including the present stance and condition of the Tory alternative, it may be the least unsatisfactory solution; but it is not one that will greatly hearten Britain's partners either in the European Community or on this side of the Atlantic.

Graham Hovey is a member of the Editorial Board of The Times.

Behind this simple device lies a profound solution.

The Electric Economy.

Electricity can't serve as an ingredient in medicines, asphalt, synthetic fabrics or fertilizers. For those applications we need oil and natural gas. Even the plastic in a light switch is a derivative of oil.

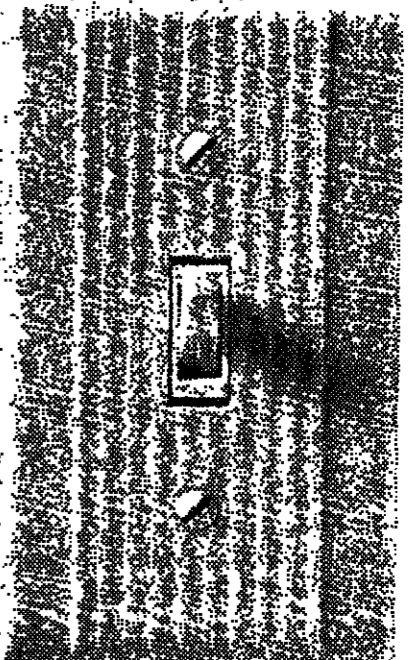

But that's where the switch to an Electric Economy provides a solution. The simple fact is that electricity can run cars, trucks, trains, entire factories, at the same time conserving gas and oil for jobs that only they can do. Electricity can be generated from a variety of sources. And that's simply more efficient than using up our scarce resources.

At The Southern Company we're concerned about other efficiencies too. The companies in our system are already using coal as fuel for generating their output. At our solvent refining research plant, we're studying a method that could raise the heat content of raw coal—more energy for every ounce of fuel. And what's more, the process removes pollutants from the coal even before it gets to the furnaces at the power plants.

In another area of research, the first mechanical draft cooling tower of its design in the U.S. is already in operation in our system. Its round configuration, unique to this type of cooling tower, saves both space and construction materials.

Efficiency—it can be increased also by balancing electric demand. We're working with systems that automatically schedule energy-consuming industrial plant processes to off-peak hours. And we're experimenting with dual metering—a system that rewards consumers with lower rates if they use appliances during periods of low demands.

The switch is on, and at The Southern Company system we're preparing for the energy-efficient Electric Economy. If you'd like the details of what we're doing, just write Dept. 342 for our annual report.

It is 13 years since the accompanying analysis of women's magazines appeared in the book that is generally credited with having started the women's liberation movement. Since then, American women by the millions have questioned their own dearly held assumption and reassessed their lives. They have changed their attitudes, their priorities, their life styles, and even in some cases, their partners.

The image of woman that emerges from this big, pretty magazine is young and frivolous, almost childlike; fluffy and feminine; passive; gaily content in a world of bedroom and kitchen, sex, babies and 'home. The magazine surely does not leave out sex; the only passion, the only pursuit, the only goal a woman is permitted is the pursuit of gone to such feminist magazines as Ms. while the other women remained faithful to the traditional women's magazines. But this kind of explanation simply does not suffice. In this month's issue, the magazine reports that nearly three-quarters of the women readers it surveyed felt that the women's liberation movement had affected their lives directly. The report notes that 36 percent of the readers said they "became more assertive about their needs and desires," although 33 percent said they were "angry with the women's movement itself."

An article in The New York Times on Feb. 27 said that the public relations firm of Sydney S. Baron & Company had hired Jules Backman, an economist, to serve as spokesman for its client, the Electronic Industries Association of Japan, before Congressional committees. Mr. Backman wrote a report for the Baron company on electronic imports but was not retained to appear before Congressional committees and did not appear before any committee.

Most Jerseyans in Poll Back Income Tax

By JOSEPH F. SULLIVAN
A majority of New Jerseyans interviewed in a poll by The New York Times support a state income tax and casino gambling in Atlantic City. Most believe that living in New Jersey is better than outsiders may think. They are pleased with their life style, proud of their beach resorts and satisfied with the environment, but they are unhappy with the tax structure and worried about the economy.

These were among the findings of a telephone poll this month that sought opinions on 31 questions on a broad range of issues about New Jersey—its assets, its problems and its future. Residents were also asked 10 questions about themselves.

Of those interviewed, 53 percent favored an income tax to help distribute more evenly the burden of paying for education and other services, 38 percent were against it and 9 percent had no opinion. Fifty percent were for the establishment of casino gambling, 32 percent were opposed and 12 percent had no opinion. Governor Byrne said he supported, but would not campaign for a new proposal to limit casinos to Atlantic City.

Despite statistics that show the state to be the nation's most densely populated, with 7.5 million people, many in the poll talked about the "country setting" of their areas, saying that the state was still relatively uncrowded and unpolluted. Some said they liked New Jersey because "it's not New York City."

Fears for Environment
However, fears about the environment outstripped fears about crime and worry about education.

In addition, fears over the future of the state's billion-dollar shore resort industry, the state's second largest, have been heightened by the Federal leasing of offshore underwater tracts for oil exploration.

"This is one place where people can relax and develop themselves, unlike New York City," said a young suburban housewife.

A middle-aged man with three children at home said the state had "reasonably good schools, and was low in crime and other urban pollution." However, he predicted the continued spread of urban stum problems and attributed this to "a large population of wealthy transients who have an 'I-don't-give-a-damn' attitude."

A black man in his 40's who was reared in Newark and moved to the suburbs said New Jersey had "lots of greenery" and lived up to its "Garden State" image, but suffered from "a lack of people-oriented programs."

The poll showed overwhelming agreement that women should be able to have abortions on demand, that teachers should be given more leeway in disciplining children in schools, that men and women should be equal before the law, that anti-pollution laws should be enforced more strongly and that criminals should be punished more severely.

A majority opposed the bus-ing of schoolchildren to achieve integration, but supported the concept that communities should make housing available for people of "all different incomes." There also was support for a commercial television station in the state.

Those polled said that they followed local politics more closely than national politics and had more interest in both than in state politics. They said that they expected things to improve in the state and the nation in the next five years, but that they would remain "about the same" in their home towns.

Asked what they thought was the more important problem—holding down inflation or finding jobs for those who wanted to work—more than 70 percent said jobs.

Those interviewed reflected a cross section of the state's population. For example, 10 percent were blacks, a close approximation of their number in the state.

About 62 percent of those interviewed were reared in the state, while 38 percent moved in as adults. Those who considered themselves moderates outnumbered those who described themselves as liberal or conservative. Political independents outnumbered enrolled Democrats slightly and Republicans by 2 to 1.

Two-Thirds Married
Nearly two-thirds of the people polled are married and more than half of them have children. More than 30 percent earn between $12,000 and $20,000 a year, and 25 percent earn in excess of $20,000. Eighty percent earn between $7,500 and $12,000, while 15 percent earn less than $7,500.

Specific issues—abortion, housing, crime and schools—were covered in the poll by statements such as, "A woman should be able to have an abortion if she wants one," in which the person being interviewed could agree, disagree, have mixed feelings or decline to give an opinion.

Four questions gave the respondents a chance to choose themselves what two things they liked most about New Jersey, what they considered the state's biggest problem and what they thought was the cause of the problems they perceived.

Government and taxes were mentioned by 31 percent as the state's biggest problem, with the economy next at 27 percent. Twelve percent cited the environment, 7 percent said crime and 6 percent education, including school financing.

President Ford was specifically named by 3 percent as the chief cause of the problems, almost 6 percent blamed Governor Byrne, 4 percent said it was the State Legislature and 3 percent cited the courts. The rest criticized "politicians and bureaucrats" and the Federal, state and local governments.

Overall, more than 42 percent of the replies blamed some aspect of "government" for the trouble, but there were indications that the electorate might be shedding the cynicism spawned by Watergate and recent state government scandals. Only five people, or less than 1 percent of the sample, mentioned "corruption" as a cause of state problems.

the photorealistic mode, the mural was commissioned by Gregory Dawson, a co-owner of The Ballroom, in an attempt to portray significant SoHo-ites who have figured in the area's development as "in an international art center."

Most of the "cast" had been posed at The Ballroom by ones and twos, then photographed by Miss Pinto before she did the painting.

Last evening a number of them dropped in the flesh to see how they looked on canvas.

"We had to leave out a lot of people," Miss Pinto said, explaining that the 19 figures who actually made it (including Miss Pinto herself, a back view) were "the most I could handle."

The idea for the mural, measuring 14 feet by eight feet, was hatched more than a year ago when Mr. Dawson met Miss Pinto, a SoHo resident who recently had her first solo show there, at a cocktail party.

"We thought, what fun to have a painting of SoHo people," Mr. Dawson said. "From its beginning three years ago, The Ballroom has shown art for sale, and I've always felt that the same sensibility that responds to food is receptive to art."

Mr. Dawson, who sees the new work as a worthy companion to such prominent restaurant art in the city as the Howard Chandler Christy murals at the Cafe des Artistes on West 67th Street, the Ludwig Bemelmans frieze at The Carlyle, and the Maxwell Parrish mural at the St. Regis, added: "I'm acstastic that it works so well."

At 6:30 last evening, when the shimmering white curtain that covered the mural was drawn, there was a moment's silence, then a burst of applause. By and large, the eight or nine cast members who showed up had kind remarks for what Miss Pinto had wrought.

"I love it," said Miss Remington. "We're all so idealized, none of us has a wrinkle." Mr. Rivers said, "I feel slightly flattered. She took something of me and enveloped it in a kind of glow."

Robert Indiana, the painter, noted coolly: "It comes off well. Of course, I wouldn't want to be having dinner here with everyone in the picture." And Alex Katz mused: "I think I look kind of distinguished, and it's looks that count. I'm glad she didn't try for inner truths."

722 Adult Residents Took Part in Survey

The New York Times poll of 722 New Jersey adults was conducted by telephone from March 4 through March 8.

The phone numbers were selected at random by a computer from a complete list of New Jersey telephone numbers. This method insured that there was an equal chance of each residential phone in New Jersey being called.

Statistically, one can say with 95 percent certainty that results based on a sample of this size will differ by no more than 4 percent in either direction from results that would have been obtained by interviewing all New Jersey adults.

However, as in any survey of public opinion, this margin of error is undoubtedly somewhat larger because of un-avoidable imperfections in the way the survey was conducted and because some of those called refused to be interviewed.

"Animals in the zoo live in luxury compared to the sickening squalor and subhuman conditions of this place," Senator Goodman said during the tour. "Anybody visiting here can understand why so many of society's lost men spend their days haunting parks and doorways."

"What is he talking about?" asked a man who said he frequented the shelter regularly.

Violations Alleged
Senator Goodman said that the men at the shelter did not receive adequate medical and psychological care and that the hotels to which they were sent for the night were "no more than roach-infested, crime-ridden flophouses subsidized by the city."

He cited a state inspection report that had found the shelter in violation of standards for equipment, services, sanitation and fire safety.

The director of the center, Merwyn Goldstein, said he was not supposed to comment on conditions there.

Frank Wexler, deputy director of the Bureau of Adult Institutional Services in the Human Resources Administration, who has supervisory authority over the shelter, said he shared some of Mr. Goodman's concerns.

"We serve lunches to about 1,200 men each day of the year at a cost of $1.40 each, or $700,800 per year, and we pay for their lodging at welfare hotels at a cost of $1.60 per night, or $613,200 a year," Mr. Wexler said. "Most of the remainder of our budget goes for administrative costs."

He said that the shelter's population was somewhat stable now but that the men seemed younger than in previous years because of rising unemployment and other social causes.

"I am not satisfied with the level of care we give here," Mr. Wexler said. "But it is better than last year."

A Mission of Mercy for a Blind Boy

By ROBERT D. MCFADDEN
Liviu Negut, a shy, 6-year-old dark-haired boy from a small mountain village in eastern Rumania, will arrive at Kennedy International Airport this afternoon with the slender hope of regaining the eyesight he lost as an infant.

Accompanied by his father and a Rumanian Orthodox priest from his village of Leressti, the almost totally blind boy will be met at the Pan American Terminal at 5:30 P.M. by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Morgan, a New York couple who had arranged and paid for the journey.

The couple, who run a non-profit cultural exchange foundation called Friendship Ambassadors, obtained the help of Elena Ceausescu, the wife of Rumania's President, Nicolae Ceausescu, in making arrangements for the trip.

Met Boy on a Trip
They plan to put the visitors up at their apartment at 10 West 68th Street, and have begun seeking the help of medical and charitable organizations on behalf of Liviu.

"We want to help this boy get his eyesight back if it's at all possible," Mr. Morgan said last night.

Specific arrangements have yet to be made, he said. But he noted that the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York had promised to help with arrangements for hospital services, tests to determine whether restoration of the boy's sight was a possibility, and, if so, specialists to provide treatment.

Mr. Morgan's first met Liviu in 1972, on one of their numerous trips to Eastern Europe, when they stayed briefly in Leressti, an agricultural and forestry community of about 6,000 people northeast of Bucharest.

Shortly before that time, at the age of 18 months, the boy had been stricken by meningitis-encephalitis, which left him semiparalyzed, deaf and blind. His paralysis and deafness disappeared after a few weeks, but the blindness remained and has diminished only minutely in the last four years.

Rumanian doctors have been unable to restore Liviu's sight but a medical commission appointed last year by Mrs. Ceausescu concluded in December that further treatment by specialists in the United States might be helpful, according to Mr. and Mrs. Morgan.

The key question, they said, was whether the boy's optic nerves had atrophied over the last couple of years.

Arriving on the flight from Bucharest with Liviu will be his father, Cezar, a mining engineer, and his village priest and his wife, the Rev. and Mrs. Stelian Suseanu. Liviu's mother, Eugenia, is at home with the couple's other small child, a daughter.

The Morgans, who were married in 1973 in Liviu's village of Leressti, will greet the visitors with Rumanian tokens of hospitality—flowers, bread dipped in salt and a plum brandy known as

By BARBARA CAMPBELL
A group of volunteer tutors sitting in the office of the principal of Public School 169 in Bayside, Queens, were talking intently about their first-grade pupils before they begin instruction: "I knew I wanted to help a child try to read well," one tutor said. "Because if they can't read, now, they may drop out of school later."

Another agreed. "Yes, but you need patience—lots of patience. My child last year was nervous. She was always peeling her pencil and I had to go over and over everything with her until she got it."

The first speaker was Ronit Setton, 11 years old, and the second, Ellen Nicolli, 11. Both girls are in the sixth grade at the school and they are part of a group of 20 fifth- and sixth-grade boys and girls who are volunteer tutors for first-grade children with reading problems.

Tutors Make Difference
The student volunteer tutors have made a difference in the school life of their charges who have difficulty with reading for a variety of reasons, including excessive shyness, emotional problems and short attention span.

They need the individual attention that the student tutors give them twice a week for a half hour and they would not get it otherwise because P.S. 169, like most public schools, suffered severe staff cuts. The teachers left do not have the time to help the children, although a special effort is made early to identify children who have reading problems.

On information sheets provided by first-grade teachers about each student recommended for tutoring were remarks like these: "Help F. to gain confidence. Help her to participate more so that she can gain a better self-image. She is a very shy child." or this, "D. is very quiet and had difficulty reading. He needs a friend."

Terrific With Little Kids
Ira N. Toff, the principal of the school who thought of using the student tutors after parent volunteers dropped out of the program, says his school is ranked eighth in the city in reading, but that he had noticed recent reading test scores showed a rise in a "hard-core" of pupils reading a year or so behind.

Scores, he says, tended to drop off in grade two. And first-grade teachers told him they were having problems with some students in beginning reading.

Mr. Toff attributes some of the early-reading difficulties to the rise in broken homes in the well-to-do area.

He says the student volunteer tutors help with the young students have exceeded his expectations. "They are terrific with the little kids," he says. "There seems to be a special understanding between them and their students."

The tutors, working in a former first-grade classroom with their students, have very little supervision. They were given some training in teaching reading at first by Mr. Toff and James Burke of Queensboro College, a reading specialist and an old friend, and they are periodically monitored by the two teachers.

"Now, look at this again," says Jeffrey Mass, 11, a fifth-grader to his 6-year-old charge. "look at the way you wrote the K and look at the way they wrote the K. Why do you have three lines in your K?" The little boy corrects himself. "That's good" says Jeffrey, who said he had a sister in first grade whom he helped with her reading.

One problem is the short attention span of the 6-year-olds. The tutors learned early to devise methods of keeping their attention: Steven Nussbaum, 11, also in the sixth grade, who brings additional reading aides and books from home because both of his parents are teachers, grabs his pupil's attention by changing the lesson.

Baseball Idiom Used

Steven draws a baseball diamond and tells the boy every right answer is a home run.

Perhaps because there is a subliminal understanding that exists among children, the tutors appear to quickly adapt

Machine-Washable 'Suede'

By GEORGIA DULLEA

It seems that every other woman with a washing machine is dashing off to buy an Ultrasuede dress to toss into it.

Ultrasuede, a pseudosuede fabric that costs more than the real thing, is no longer just a luxury in the laundry of the ultrafashionable. Now other women want to wear—and wash—it.

"I haven't washed mine yet, but I'm afraid to do them in the machine," Mary Beame, the Mayor's wife, was saying the other day. "I'll just have my maid wash them in that powdered stuff—what's it called?—Woolite."

But Elinor Guggenheimer, the City's Commissioner of Consumer Affairs and the owner of three Ultrasuede dresses, rates the fabric "absolutely machine-washable."

Which is a comfort to everyone except Mrs. Guggenheimer. "My washing machine," she muttered, "is broken."

"I wash mine in the tub," said Jacqueline Wexler, Hunter College's president, who also wears the elbows out and patches them with Ultrasuede remnants. "It's just the best material. I only wish it weren't so expensive."

Doesn't everybody? Four years ago, when Halston put Ultrasuede on the fashion map, his shirtdress sold for $180. Today, 35,000 shirt-dresses and heaven knows how many wash cycles later, that same trusty little number is walking out of the stores at $360.

"And I do it now in 36 colors," Halston boasts. "That's more than Baskin-Robbins does for ice cream."

Others in the Act

Halston doesn't waste all his Ultrasuede on shirtdresses. He uses it for everything from culottes to evening outfits. And other top designers now share his passion for this synthetic fabric whose wholesale price has jumped from $7.50 a yard for a 36-inch width to $18.75 for a 45-inch width.

Even so, they say they consider themselves blessed to be able to buy Ultrasuede at any price because of the limited supply and heavy demand.

"Nobody ever gets as much as they need," Mollie Parnis said with a sigh. "Ultrasuede is like diamonds."

Now when a designer talks about a fake suede and a precious stone in the same breath you know this particular fake suede is something special.

Ultrasuede is that. For one thing, its manufacturer, Toray Industries of Japan, owns more than 100 patents on the process. For another, Ultrasuede is imported and distributed here only through the Skinner division of Springs Mills.

"It's not something they can just grind out," said Mary Connell, a spokesman for the distributor, declining to say either how much Toray grinds out or Skinner sells.

Mrs. Connell did say Ultrasuede contained 60 percent polyester and 40 percent nonfibrous polyurethane, but you can read all about that on the tag that comes with the clothes. And, unless you happen to be a chemist, do you care?

What interests women about Ultrasuede—at least those shopping in Lord & Taylor's the other noon—is how close it comes to looking and feeling like the real thing without the $40 cleaning bill.

She Liked the Look

"Stunning," said Miriam Summ, meaning the look of the Halston wrap dress, not the $380 price on the tag.

Mrs. Summ, an assistant professor of education at Bergen Community College in New Jersey, said she was buying the dress to wear to work and to travel in.

"But I'm not one of those jet setters," she insisted, "not at all. This to me is a big investment. It's my one luxurious thing to own."

Catherine Loguidice, a secretary, raved about the colors. "So springy, so soft." She bought the same dress as the college professor but she did not pin it on top. Nor did she plan to wear it to work.

"I'll wear it to a dinner party or when I want to look great," Miss Loguidice said.

Maxine Kohler looked glum. A slender size 8, she was frowning at the mirror and fuming that she might as well be a size 14, for all Ultrasuede did for her figure.

"I feel like, like a President's wife," Mrs. Kohler said, tugging at the fabric. "It's boring and it's aging. It's not young."

But didn't she like the mauve color with her golden hair?

"No," she snapped. "I look like an Easter egg."

Mrs. Kohler typifies the women who try on new Ultrasuedes every season. First this designer, then that one. They want to love it, but they can't. Who can love non-fibrous polyurethane? they ask.

Still, nobody ever said that Ultrasuede was perfect. Just practical. Even women whose closets are filled with it admit that it feels a little funny, at first, a little warm sometimes. And as for the styles, the most diplomatic term was "classic."

"The styles are all simple and unrememberable," said Mrs. Guggenheimer, who calls a shirtdress a shirtdress. "With a different piece of jewelry or a different scarf, people forget that you're wearing what you wore yesterday."

geously expensive" but indispensable to the traveler.

"With Ultrasuede you don't arrive with a big crease around your front," Miss Stoddard, an interior decorator, said. "There's nothing chic about that. And you don't have to carry an iron. And you can't wear it in the tub, hang it and wear it the next day."

Face to Face With the Spirit of the Clay

At Greenwich House Pottery workshop, women lie on floor with slabs of clay over their faces and form masks

By LISA HAMMEL

Some of the women were lying on the floor, others were sitting on tables. A few stood, or knelt.

"Now, put the clay on your face," said Robert Sherman. "If you think you're going to have a problem with breathing, punch nose or mouth holes in it."

And each of the 13 women took a thick, flat slab of clay and put it on her face. A lesson in facial treatments? No. A pottery workshop.

The idea behind the one-day workshop, said Mr. Sherman, a potter with a background in improvisational theater, was to loosen people up creatively.

"On education," said Mr. Sherman, "orients us to thinking in terms of an end product, and of getting upright about whether it's good or bad, rather than just being involved in the process of creating. I think what I do in these workshops," he added, "is create a safe space where people can go inside of themselves and then work from the inside out."

Mr. Sherman has been doing workshops for four years at colleges, museums, potteries and craft schools, as well as for acting groups.

The one that Saturday, for which each participant paid $15, was held at Greenwich House Pottery.

Most of the women there (it was not restricted to women but no men registered for the workshop) said they were involved in pottery in some way. They ranged from enthusiastic dabblers to people with a few years' experience.

Getting Relaxed

The morning was spent on what Mr. Sherman said were loosening-up exercises. "These," he explained afterwards, "are to stretch the body, the voice, the mind, and also to get people less self-conscious and more in touch with themselves."

So the women, dressed in jeans and head kerchiefs, or their oldest clothes, spent several hours jiggling their hands and feet, shouting, whispering, gibbering, breathing into their fingertips and pinching bits of clay.

It was after lunch when things really got under way, but not before a few more stretches and breathings and shouting of "hey" to the floor.

Finally, the moment came. "Experience the clay on your face," Mr. Sherman said softly as each woman put on the slab.

What is it like to sit under a slab of clay that envelops you from forehead to collarbone?

It is very cool in there, and rather dark except for the light that comes up from under your chin. It is like being inside a small cave. A cave of the mind. Quite alone. Even sounds seem muffled and far away.

And then one begins to work the clay on the face, wondering what one's hands are making, searching for a nose beneath and hitting a mouth instead, growing a bit short of breath, scrambling around blindly on the surface, getting ideas, images, trying to form them in the clay as quickly as possible.

And then time is called, and the mask is scooped off and laid carefully on a newspaper.

My... it is not at all what one thought it was going to be. The eyes are lopsided. The nose is a poor pinched little thing. There is no mouth. And such strange ears.

Still, it has an interesting primitive quality, a rather untamed je-ne-sais-quoi. If it were glazed in some interesting way and then fired... there is a spot above the mantel where it might look quite handsome and mysterious.

Mr. Sherman makes an announcement. He has made it before but apparently no one has paid attention. All the masks will be destroyed at the end of the workshop. The point of the workshop, he reminds everyone, is to get people to concentrate on creative process and free themselves from concern about end product. Oh, well.

Play on Words

Two more masks are made by each participant. For one of them, Mr. Sherman suggests a play on some mask-type words: "hide," "screen," "cloak," "disguise," "conceal," "cover."

The other is done in partnership, with each woman taking turns. The mask-maker crouches or sits cross-legged on the floor, while the other sits behind her, communicating some fantastical spirit through touch and sound—but no words. Sitting very close together, the pair are like two mute paddlers in a tight canoe.

The room is suddenly full of gestures and movements, which have to be transmitted by the spirit partner through the mask-maker's back or arms. And the air rings with strange sounds: mewls and groans and howls and whimpers, while the mask-maker works furiously to express in clay the sounds she hears and gestures she feels.

Finally, all three sets of masks are finished and laid out on the floor of an adjoining studio. They are amazingly different from one another. Some are simple, realistic life masks. Some are eerie, grotesque. Some are bestial. Some are funny.

The participants gather around them, commenting, analyzing, explaining. Yes, they say, the workshop helped them. Or they hope it helped them. They needed freeing from overstrict disciplines, needed fresh images, needed to be able to penetrate more deeply into themselves, needed to look at things with fresh eyes, the way children do.

But, oh, some of them add, glancing with wistful admiration at the masks they have created, the pain of having all those original creations turned back in a moment into so many anonymous lumps of clay.

City to Pay Broker's Fee In Auction Sale of School

By JOHN L. HESS

For services that are not altogether clear, the city has decided to pay a brokerage fee of $35,500 to Abraham M. Lindenbaum, the real estate lawyer and Democratic fundraiser, in connection with the sale of a school.

The fee will come due "on or about June 1," when title to the former Central Commercial High School passes to Charles B. Benenson, a prominent developer. He will pay $2 million for the property, a 150-foot-wide strip extending from 42d to 41st Street east of Third Avenue.

The school and land, assessed at $3,625 million, were first put up for sale at auction last September at an "upset price," or minimum, of $3 million. There were no bidders.

One Bid Made

The upset price was then lowered to $2 million, and the auction, duly advertised, was repeated on Dec. 17. Mr. Benenson made the only bid.

Two weeks earlier, the buyer had routinely notified the city's Department of Real Estate that he contemplated bidding on the property and was authorizing the firm of Lindenbaum & Young to act as his broker. Under the department's policy, this guaranteed the firm a fee, paid by the city, if he made the winning bid.

Mr. Benenson was asked in an interview what service Mr. Lindenbaum had performed. "He arranged the deal," Mr. Benenson replied. "Discussing it with him one day, I said I'd be interested in it at a lower price [than the original $3 million]. He said, 'I think I can arrange a lower price. And he did it.'"

Mr. Lindenbaum remembered it differently. He said that he had talked to anybody in the city government about lowering the price. Rather, he said, "I called it to my client's attention that it was up the second time." He added: "Here I did a good thing, and I'm going to be chastised."

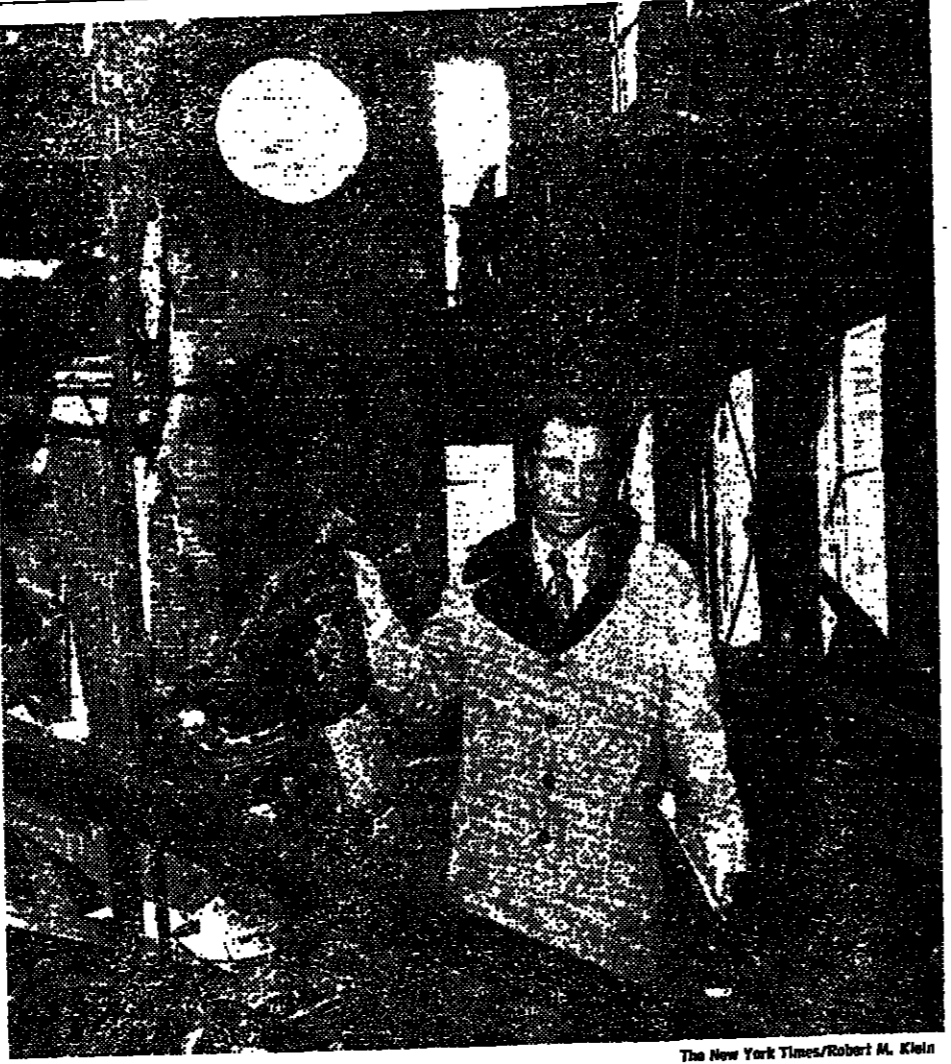

Mr. Lindenbaum said he assumed that the city had consulted an appraiser before deciding on the $2 million price. But Marvin Bogner, the spokesman for the Department of Real Estate, said: "There were no outside appraisers and no calls from any broker or interested party requesting that the price be lowered."

The department's file on the auction contains a memorandum by Morton Levine, the director of sales, saying that he had obtained a legal ruling that a broker was entitled to his fee even though the buyer had decided to register the purchase in the name of a company different from the one that had designated the broker, Mr. Benenson had in fact assigned the title to a private company that he said was a nominee for himself.

Asked about the memorandum, Mr. Levine said: "We had a lot of copies, and I guess we just stuck it in there." On further thought, however, he decided: "It must have arisen in this situation."

All parties agreed that it was customary in real estate transactions for the seller to pay a brokerage fee. "Our theory is that the broker brought in a customer," Mr. Levine explained. "In other types of auctions, a broker must collect his fee from the buyer. But the city last year, according to the department spokesman, paid about $500,000 to brokers in auctions that brought in $13 million."

The spokesman acknowledged that under the city's policy, anomalies might arise. For example, if Bidder A, a party who has not designated a broker, stops at $99,000 in an auction, and Bidder B, who has designated a broker, then goes to $100,000, the city will pay the broker $5,000 and net $95,000 for the property. Had Bidder A won, the city would have gotten $99,000.

Legislator Decries Synagogue Arson

By ELEANOR BLAU

Assemblyman Charles E. Schumer led a tour of a burned-out synagogue on the Lower East Side yesterday to dramatize legislation he is introducing to try to curb arson in houses of worship.

"Right now if you burned a synagogue or a shack in a vacant lot you'd get the same penalty [up to two years in jail and rarely do they prosecute]," the Brooklyn Democrat told reporters as he stood amid broken glass and rubble in the charred hallway of Congregation Anshe Vilna at 203 Henry Street.

Mr. Schumer is proposing legislation that would impose a maximum penalty of 15 years in jail for arson in houses of worship. The offense, now fourth-degree arson, would become second-degree arson, which Mr. Schumer said now includes the burning of a building with intent to kill when, in fact, no people were inside.

The proposed legislation is supported by District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau of Manhattan, he said. He added that he knew of no opponents so far, but that "you can never tell, in Albany there is opposition to motherhood and apple pie."

The Rooney family, which owns the Pittsburgh Steelers football team and two other harness tracks, bought Yonkers Raceway for $47 million in 1972. Six members of the family, including Arthur J. Rooney Sr., president of the Steelers, are officers of Ruanaidh Associates, Ruanaidh announced "rue-Ah-ny" means "Rooney" in Gaelic.

Each of the Rooney's has received at least $100,000 a year in salaries from the track. In addition, the report noted, John Macartney, a member of Ruanaidh Associates, has obtained legal fees ranging from $110,000 to $240,000 annually.

The commission said that through a complex mortgage and lease-back arrangements the race track at its own expense was providing its owners "with amounts ranging from $42,319 to $183,519 in tax-sheltered income." According to the S.C.I., the Rooneys also organized a new food and tobacco concession that is costing the track $600,000 annually but that benefits the Rooneys.

Furthermore, the S.C.I. report suggested that the Rooneys transferred more than $1.9 million in Yonkers stock for the purchase of the Green Mountain Racing Corporation, a Vermont track.

The report also disclosed that Arthur Levitt Jr., the son of State Comptroller Arthur Levitt, was one of five "Class A" partners in Ruanaidh Associates, with a $75,000 investment. "The profits returned on the actual investment in the Yonkers Racing Corporation by the members of Ruanaidh Associates are considerable," the S.C.I. declared.

The commission said that Timothy Rooney, president of the Yonkers Corporation, refused to be questioned by Joseph Fisch, the commission's chief counsel, and Albert Sohn, the chief accountant. The commission declined an offer by Mr. Rooney to reply to written interrogatories.

Yonkers Raceway last year provided the state with $34.9 million in revenues, and Roosevelt provided $32.08 million.

HYNES TO DEFEND BID FOR AUDITORS

Nursing-Home Prosecutor to Talk With Legislators

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 22—Charles J. Hynes, the special state prosecutor in the nursing-home situation, was asked by Assembly Democrats today to appear with his staff before legislative fiscal aides tomorrow to defend his request for a $2.3 million budget appropriation providing his office with 90 more auditors.

Assemblymen Burton G. Hecht, a Bronx Democrat who is chairman of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee, said that Mr. Hynes would go over details of his budget and that his committee would then study and consider the appropriation request for possible action this week or next.

Mr. Hecht's initiative was seen as an attempt to temper some of the criticism heaped on the Legislature last week when it deleted the request for more auditors in its adoption of a $10.78 billion state budget. Mr. Hynes suggested that its action might have been a result of his political, including the recent indictment on a perjury charge of Albert H. Blumenthal, the Assembly majority leader.

Mr. Hynes said he telephoned Mr. Fynes this morning and set up the closed meeting for tomorrow afternoon. His initiative was the first in a series that might lead to more auditors, he wants, or at least add more auditors to the Health Department for use by Mr. Hynes's office.

At the same time, Warren M. Anderson, the majority leader of the Republican-controlled Senate, said he still felt there was no need for more auditors for Mr. Hynes. "We'll have to see whether we gave them enough," he said today. "I think we did, but we'll see."

Both the Republican and Democratic leadership of the Legislature had agreed to delete the request for 90 new auditors in Mr. Hynes's office on the ground, they said, that the budget was furnishing 258 now auditing positions to the Health Department, and that Mr. Hynes would be able to use 120 of them.

Although the Legislature ended a long round of negotiations with the passage of a budget last week, talks were still going on today on a package of amendments appropriating money for various commissions and local programs favored by individual lawmakers.

Budgetary aides said myriad disagreements had arisen among Democrats, in particular, over which neighborhood groups, special legislative commissions and other entities would benefit from the appropriations. Democrats in the Republican-controlled Senate were said to be resentful that so many appropriations were benefiting Democrats in the Assembly, where they are in the majority.

Also, Governor Carey's office was preparing a series of bills that officials there said had to be passed by March 31. Among these were a package of bills enabling the state to win Federal mortgage insurance for $258 million worth of state Mitchell-Lama housing projects and a $10 million up the debt-reserve deficiency in the Housing Finance Agency when the Co-op City rent strike in the Bronx.

Also, the Governor's office wants to come to agreement with the Legislature soon on a state lottery proposal, which they say has to be enacted by the beginning of the next fiscal year, April 1, the money is to be available for the budget.

Panel Asks Wage Freeze For City Transit Workers

By EDWARD C. BURKS

The Temporary Commission on City Finances urged yesterday that wages be frozen for Transit Authority workers and that the transit fare be held at its present rate until July 1, 1978.

The 22-member commission, appointed by Mayor Beame last August, said in a report that gaps in the Transit Authority's operating budget in the next two years could and should be closed through reductions in operating costs.

The report, issued as negotiations intensified between the Transit Authority and Transport Workers Union over a new work contract, said: "If the Transit Authority is to accomplish meaningful expenditure control, it must do so by halting the rapid increase in labor costs that has accounted for 82 percent of the authority's expenditure increase in the last decade."

The present contract expires at the end of the month, and the union is calling for substantial wage improvements.

Owen McGovern, commission chairman and a retired presiding justice of the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court, said in the report: "Our analysis indicates that the Transit Authority has considerable leeway to effect major economies in the delivery of subway and bus services in New York City."

Tax Change Discounted

The report called for economies of more than $230 million, including increasing productivity of workers, cutting manpower totals through attrition, reducing overtime, tightening control of purchases and such work rule changes as eliminating the paid lunch period.

In the fourth in a series of major financial reports for the city, the commission said that additional state or local taxes—or a diversion of existing taxes—would not be necessary in the next two years.

This recommendation was directly contrary to the hopes of the Transit Authority, which had urged the Legislature to approve a regional transit tax and to raise gasoline taxes to help fill deficits.

Members of the commission include businessmen, labor union leaders and leaders.

In another recommendation, the commission said that the Transit Authority should not raise local transit fares and that they should be substantially increased city's present transit fare of $434 million—is $188 million greater than the combined state and federal subsidies. The panel said that should not be raised above current annual level.

According to the commission's labor and Federal formulas discriminating against the city in granting a since they do not suff take ridership totals i count. It was noted that the Transit Authority only 61 percent of the politan region's transit under the state formula ried 94 percent of the passengers.

DelBello Asks County to Modify 2-Year-Old Disposal System

By JAMES FERON

Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, March 22—Mr. DelBello has since promised Port Chester that it will not be the site of the resource recovery unit and has indicated to residents of Katonah Ridge in Bedford that he will consider alternatives to placing a transfer station a few hundred yards from their homes. The site of a usable grit, also remains undetermined.

These promises, in turn, have prompted residents and political leaders from previously acceptable transfer and disposal sites to demand modifications, leading waste-disposal experts to believe that the plan may require further changes before it is accepted.

Democratic minority members of the Board of Legislators have acknowledged that Mr. DelBello, also a Democrat, made a mistake in failing to notify local political leaders of his plans before revealing them, especially in Port Chester.

New Site Promised

John Messina, a Republican board member who headed the solid-waste committee until this year and who also represents Port Chester, was furious when he found his two-square-mile village named as a resource-recovery site on a map provided by the county.

The Mayor of Port Chester, Joseph Dzaluk, was similarly indignant over not being informed. By nightfall of the day the changes became known, Mr. DelBello faced 600 angry Port Chester residents and promised to find another site to process the shore area's 1,350 tons of daily garbage.

T.W.U. Economist Asserts Underpays Its Transit Workers

By LEE DEMBART

Negotiations for a new transit workers' contract moved into high gear yesterday with the Transport Workers Union offering a detailed chart-and-slide presentation to show that its 34,000 members were underpaid.

Leon H. Keyserling, the union's economist, and John F. O'Donnell, its general counsel, spent the morning and afternoon sessions at the Americana Hotel arguing that transit workers had lost buying power during the current two-year contract and that they were being paid less than transit workers in other cities and less than other, comparable workers in New York City.

But David L. Yunich, chairman of the Transit Authority, remarked during a break, "I am not convinced that transit workers are underpaid."

Observers agreed that this stage of the negotiations was largely cosmetic, with the union playing more to its own people than to the Transit Authority or the three-man mediation panel, which will make a fact-finding report before the strike deadline a week from tomorrow night.

Today the Transit Authority is scheduled to get into the act. Its own economist, Stanley Ruttenberg, will present the management's statistics.

The real bargaining, however, will not begin till late in the week when a much smaller group of negotiators will wrestle with the problem of how to give the bus and subway workers a raise that the Introducing Ban Basic, an anti-perspirant spray without aerosol propellants.

Ban Basic[®] does a lot for you. It has been shown to be more effective than Arrid Extra Dry in stopping wetness.

Will you prefer it to the aerosol you're using now? Well, we gave Ban Basic non-aerosol spray to the entire town of Sonoma, California to try. And aerosol users who had a preference preferred Ban Basic more than 2 to 1 over their regular spray.

Ban Basic provides all day protection against odor.

Just as we think you will.

Ban Basic is concentrated so it is more economical. Ounce for ounce, Ban Basic lasts four times longer than leading aerosols*. Because it has a higher level of anti-perspirant ingredient per ounce and no propellants. So you can save money.

Economist Joan Robinson, 72, Retains Her Spirit of Fight

gets of her attack today—that they wish she would stop. Apparently, they are still bruised from the knock-down debate conducted in academic journals some 15 years ago between the two Cambridge—England and Massachusetts.

Professor Robinson claims victory in the debate, which pitted her against Paul A. Samuelson, a Nobel Prize winner, and Robert Solow, two heavyweights from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Most observers, however, say the debate was a draw.

The dispute revolved around the economic justification of profits in a theoretical capitalist system. Professor Robinson said there is no such justification. Profits—like wages, rents, and inflation—result from the constant tug-of-war between the classes that make up a society, she says.

The American Keynesians insist that profits, in theory at least, are justly earned, related somehow to the productivity of the capital goods involved.

Although the debate may sound esoteric to outsiders, it involved the very foundations of orthodox theory, raising questions about the economic justification for any given division of income among workers, bosses and landlords.

On her trip this month, the professor was asked repeatedly about the "Cambridge Controversy." Students, it seems, are still fascinated by the spectacle of the wily English eccentric battling the giants of American economics—and drawing a bit of blood.

But Professor Robinson now claims to have moved beyond the controversy and is fascinated increasingly by the problems of the Third World and the prospects for China, which she has visited seven times since the 1950's. "A person hasn't lived till he's seen China," she said, in one of her few positive comments.

In her lifestyle, as in her economic opinions, the professor is distinctly individualistic. She is a trim vegetarian, who walks some 10 miles to her woolen socks and wooden shoes—even in the snow.

Although she is usually preoccupied with economic theory, she recalls with much joy the less rigorous side of her relationship with the late Lord Keynes. In addition to theory, Keynes was deeply involved with the so-called Bloomsbury Group, a collection of avant guard thinkers and artists that dominated British intellectual life in the first 30 years of the century.

Professor Robinson describes herself as "very much on the outer fringe of the Bloomsbury group—but I used to meet with them occasionally." She also shared Keynes' love of ballet.

She attributes her fighting spirit in part, at least, to her training in Keynes' Cambridge Circus. "We didn't have that live and let live sort of behavior that seems appropriate on American campuses," she recalls proudly.

But her love of combat also reflects a personal heritage. Joan Violet Maurice was born near London on October 31, 1903, and grew up, said one associate, in a "family of dissenting aristocrats." Her father, a major general in the British army, criticized World War I policy. And an earlier forbear, a bishop, was rapped on his knuckles by the establishment for stepping out of line.

The rebel blood runs thick. When not attacking the American Keynesians, Professor Robinson cannot resist hurling thunderbolts in other directions. Some targets get short shift, such as Milton Friedman, the conservative professor from the University of Chicago, who blames most of the nation's economic woes on government policy.

"I think his ideas are absolutely doty," she said in reply to a student's query at Barnard College in New York City.

For an intellectual giant, like Karl Marx, however, the professor has more time. Her 1942 book on Marxian economics predictably outraged the orthodoxy of the left by judging Marx's famed labor theory of value to be "irrelevant."

Asked if she is a Marxist, Professor Robinson replied that "everybody has learned a great deal from Marx. His diagnosis of capitalism is the only one that makes any sense."

She scorns what she calls "pious Marxists" who cannot accept any criticism of their master. "I'm not that kind of a Marxist," she said. But she left unclear what kind she is.

Her theoretical work, too, is highly individualistic. Not just because of what it says—but also how. At a time when economic theory has become highly mathematical, she refuses to use equations. "I don't know math," she quips, "so I am obliged to think."

She is also obliged to write. And her many books are alive with metaphors. A theory she dislikes is "a slippery seal." And economists, stripped of their orthodoxy, she writes "are floundering about like ducks who have alighted on a pond and found it frozen over."

The main reason for the floundering, she says, is that economists in this country particularly still have an ideological bias toward the free market—which she describes as theoretical concept that does not really exist.

Because of this professional bias, she is gloomy about the chances for a lasting economic recovery in the West. She turns aside requests for her policy prescription and snaps: "The problem has developed beyond the point of talking about simple remedies. Keynes didn't do that either. It was the Bastard Keynesians who tried to simplify things."

Exactly what the great Lord Keynes thought about the future of modern capitalism is, however, a murky matter. In the interview, his apostle stressed that Keynes was deeply concerned with "the inherent instability of capitalism." But in the last chapter of "The General Theory," she said, he "gave in to his very strong anti-Stalinist feelings and wrote in a sort of mollywauling way about the likely survival of capitalism."

In essence, she concedes, "this was Keynes himself enunciating the Bastard Keynesian doctrine." Clearly this side of Keynes frustrates her.

"We, the younger chaps working with him, were to his left," she remarked. In part, it is precisely her femaleness that sets this professor aside from the others at the pinnacle of her profession. Many women in her mixed audiences recently said they looked to the aging professor for insight into the difficult problems of mixing wifehood (her husband, E. A. G. Robinson is also a noted Cambridge economist—though not as noted as she), motherhood ("I'm a granny," she said proudly) and professorhood.

Sylvia A. Hewlett, an assistant professor at Barnard who once studied under Professor Robinson at Cambridge, says admiringly, "Joan has never been a manipulative woman. She will never, as a matter of principal, use her charm to deal with men."

Says Professor Robinson of her career: "I suffered from my opinions, not from my sex."

A recent journal article by Professor Samuelson praised his British critic for a dazzling array of theoretical work on imperfect competition, Keynesian theory, international trade theory, Marxian economics, growth theory, economic philosophy, "and much more." The list, said the American Keynesian, "is impressive as the devil."

But Professor Robinson, whose most controversial ideas are not given wide dissemination on most American campuses, seems unconvinced by such elaborate praise. "I make very sharp criticisms," she said, "and instead of trying to meet the issue, they just say, 'Oh, she's so clever' and go on with the show."

ANACONDA KEEPS PRICE RISE TO 30

Rescinds 2c of 5c Gain on Cathodes to Match Others

The Anaconda Sales Company, which raised its price for full sheet copper cathodes by 5 cents a pound on Saturday, yesterday rescinded 2 cents of that increase and joined other major copper producers at a price of 66 cents a pound. No reason was given, but the cutback was similar to the action taken on March 1 by the Cities Service Company, which tried to raise its price by 3 cents a pound on Feb. 25. When other companies declined to go along, Cities Service rescinded its action.

Meanwhile, the Scovill Manufacturing Company's metals division, the International Nickel Company of Canada, the Hudson Bay Mining Smelting Company, the Noranda Sales Corporation and Texasgulf Inc. joined the other copper producers in raising their prices by 3 cents a pound to around 66 cents a pound.

In a related move, the Bridgeport Brass Company, the metals division of the National Distillers and Chemical Corporation, raised brass mill product prices yesterday by 3 cents a pound of copper content to reflect the higher copper prices.

Production of Steel Shows 1 For the First Time in 6 V

By GENE SMITH

For the first time in six weeks, domestic steel production slipped from the preceding week, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported yesterday. The weekly statistics placed output for the week ended March 20 at 2.51 million tons, down 1.2 percent from the preceding week when output reached its 1976 high of 2.54 million tons.

The industry's new production capability utilization index fell by one percentage point to 84 percent in the most recent week.

Total production for the year to date reached 26.82 million tons and a production capability level of 78.6 percent, highest for the year date. This was 12 percent lower than the 30.48 million tons poured in the period ended March 20, 1975, and the margin was the lowest for any cumulative period to date.

In a related development, the ern Natural Gas Company, said that it would follow other producers in raising prices of plastic film products by 3 cents a pound. The company added that prices of color compounds, concentrates and packaged natural resins from its marine plastics division would be increased by 5 to 10 percent. All changes are effective April 1.

The Westinghouse Electric Corporation said its small motor division had raised prices 5 percent on fractional horsepower motors sold to manufacturers of central and conditioners, direct space blowers, unit fan coil equipment. General Motors Inc. said that the List price of West Germany increased immediately to offset the recession in the Mark on foreign exchange markets.

Smith Cites Indonesia Payments

WASHINGTON, March 22—An official of Smith International Inc. disclosed today that Indonesia was the country involved in questionable payments the company has reported to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Several countries have been identified in connection with suits brought by the S.E.C., but Smith may be the first company under the so-called voluntary disclosure program to name the country where the payment occurred.

The disclosure came in response to an inquiry today prompted by an amendment to a registration statement Smith filed in connection with a proposed sale of 1.08 million shares and 83,850 stock-purchase warrants. The statement repeated Smith's earlier report that a local manager in a foreign country took it upon himself to advance $13,349 to a local tax consultant. The consultant said the money was paid to Government officials to settle a tax determination. Smith's statement said the company had not determined whether the money was paid to the officials or whether the consultant kept it.

E.E.C. Backs Loans to Italy and Ireland

BRUSSELS, March 22 (UPI)—The European Economic Community today signed agreements extending $800 million in bank loans to Italy and Ireland to help the two countries solve their balance-of-payments problems. The loans will be offered by some 300 European banks and guaranteed by the Common Market's member governments. A second loan of $500 million is expected to be signed in April.

Wilhelm Haferkamp, vice president for economics of the Market's Executive Commission, called the arrangement "one of the greatest capital market operations ever" and "a concrete expression of community solidarity." The loans resulted from a March 15 decision of the Market's finance ministers to aid Italy and Ireland on the condition that both countries act to improve their payments balances and control public spending.

Unitary Wage Costs Up 9% in U.S.

BRUSSELS, March 22 (UPI)—American industries are getting more for the wages they pay than those in almost all European Economic Community nations, the Common Market said today. The Common Market's monthly review said that unitary wage costs—the amount of wages paid by industry for every item produced—rose by 9 percent in the United States last year.

Within the Common Market, it said, only West Germany had a lower rate—about 6.5 percent. Otherwise, it said, the costs soared by 34 percent in Italy, 33 percent in Britain, 29 percent in Ireland, 21.5 percent in France and Belgium, 19 percent in Denmark and 15 percent in the Netherlands.

Why you should stay at America's oldest Inns on your next business trip.

Because we haven't let our up-to-date accommodations spoil some very old fashioned ideas we have on hospitality. We have built larger inns. We have updated our facilities, we can accommodate groups of 1,000 with modern meeting rooms and the latest audio visual equipment. But our traditional hospitality is as it was over 60 years ago. Good old New England hospitality. Symbolized by the bowl of apples at our front desks. Lemon-scented soap in every room, rocking chairs and homespun touches. In our dining rooms traditional New England specialties including clam chowder, Indian pudding, and lobster pie. That's why businessmen return to our inns again and again. 1975 FINANCIAL HIGHLIGHTS

	1975	1974	Increase
Net Income	$ 117,500,000	$ 104,700,000	12%
Earnings per share on common stock	$7.78	$6.62	18%
Sales	$3,878,000,000	$3,321,000,000	17%
Backlog of Business	$4,638,000,000	$3,577,000,000	30%

We believe these results demonstrate that our capabilities as a high technology, multi-market industrial organization continue to serve us well. Operating results for 1975 were the best in our history.

The common denominator of all that we do is technology. It's the driving force behind all the company's operations which are structured to serve markets within three clearly defined lines of business.

Power—consisting of aircraft engines, industrial and marine gas turbines, space propulsion.

Systems—encompassing helicopters, and airborne and automotive equipment.

Industrial equipment—comprising elevators and escalators; electrical conductors, controls, and devices relating to the transmission, distribution and application of electricity.

Big Board Listing Fee Rise Assailed

By ROBERT METZ

From time to time of late there may have been a howl or two in the executive suites of companies whose stock is listed on the New York Stock Exchange as letters arrived from the exchange concerning listing fees.

Under the basic listing fee schedule—which still prevails for those companies that don't pay minimum annual sums—listed companies pay 1/10th cent per share annually for the first two million shares listed and 1/20th cent per share for shares in excess of two million.

One chief executive of a company asked by the exchange to pay $10,000 voluntarily reacted strongly. He notes that his company had not issued shares in years and that the company's listing expense had been less than $3,000.

Ver Brothers Lists 9.7% Rise in Net on 11.7% Sales Gain for Year; Other Corporations Report

LARE M. RECKERT, president of Ver Brothers Company, said today that the company's net income rose 9.7 percent to $11.3 million in 1975 from $10.3 million in 1974. Sales rose 11.7 percent to $113.3 million in 1975 from $101.3 million in 1974.

Mr. Carroll noted, however, that "we rallied strongly in the last half of the year and did better than we thought we would at midyear. Our profit after taxes still remains at only 1.5 cents on each sales dollar, which is below our major competitors."

The ban on detergent phosphates in certain states continues and other areas are considering similar restrictions, Mr. Carroll said. However, he said the research division, working with the household products development scientists, had obtained a patent last fall on a substitute.

Ethan Allen in $1 Million Drive

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

Ethan Allen Inc., the furniture manufacturer, is betting that the public is ready to buy again and is putting up more than $1 million to implant its name in the consumer consciousness.

About three quarters of that money is going into network television, which the company is using for the first time, and the rest will be used for a fairly unusual print effort.

Robert L. Ficks Jr., vice president of advertising, believes it to be the biggest network TV ad campaign ever mounted in the home furnishings industry.

Gary Merrill, the actor, will be the company's spokesman in the three 30-second spots prepared by Daner-Fitzgerald-Sample, Ethan Allen's agency for the last year.

The purpose of the commercials, according to Robert E. Weekes, a vice president at Daner, is to communicate the size and breadth of the organization, a friendly, warm, low-pressure atmosphere, and that shopping there could be a fruitful experience.

Specifically, he said, that they will talk about the wide range of American traditional styles available; that all the furniture is displayed in room settings, and that the store personnel are trained home planners.

The target audience for the campaign is all women 18 to 19 years of age, married and single, and the commercials, which will begin running April 1, will appear during the daytime soap operas on all three networks and on ABC's "Wide World of Entertainment," a late-night entry.

The first surge of television will last 10 weeks and there will probably be more in the fall.

"You're never in doubt about your decisions at Ethan Allen," is the theme line.

Ethan Allen is a 44-year-old company, known until 1972 as the Baumritter Corporation. It has 275 retail outlets (only 12 of which are company owned) and they are called Ethan Allen Galleries. All have Colonial facades not unlike Howard Johnson's.

The print advertising, scheduled to run in 17 national publications, will not be of the usual full-color, four-color room setting variety. Instead, each publication will carry three or four quarter-page or third-page black and white ads per issue that ask, "Should the rug be red?" "Do these chairs go together?"

Magazine at OTB Off and Running

Two men have gone into the publishing business to make sure that no one has to leave an Off Track Betting office emptyhanded. They are not going to supply sure winners but they will distribute a free magazine.

OffTrack, A Magazine for the Horse Racing Fan, is being published by Iamar Publications, 17 West 45th Street. Jose Guadalupe, who was a community relations specialist at the New York OTB, is publisher, and E. Rodney Shaw, formerly with Coordinated Communications Inc., an ad agency, is ad director.

They plan to distribute eventually through betting parlors here, on Long Island, in Connecticut and Westchester, Rockland and Orange Counties.

Some 500,000 copies of the first issue (April) of the monthly publication have been delivered to parlors in Nassau and Suffolk Counties and Mr. Guadalupe is promising to be printing 2.5 million copies by the third issue. At the moment, at least a black and white page is going for $3,850 and four-color for $5,000. Besides the free distribution Off Track will be going after paid subscribers with a $9 annual rate.

What will the various OTB corporations be getting out of all this? According to Mr. Guadalupe, each will get an eight-page insert in the publication in their individual regions as well as a piece of the advertising section.

"Will the draperies match?" and "Is this sofa too big?"

"They set Ethan Allen up as authorities in the business," explained Mr. Weekes, "and they're intended to break through the clutter of four-color room settings."

The first ads will appear in the April or the spring issues of the publications and the schedule includes House Beautiful, House and Garden, Better Homes and Gardens, Woman's Day, Good Housekeeping, Redbook, Apartment Life, Bride's Magazine and Modern Bride.

The coming network debut by Ethan Allen also marks the first use of the medium by the corporation. Previously it had merely prepared the commercials for use by the retailers. The company paid for the production costs and the retailer paid for the air time. There was no co-op advertising program under which Ethan Allen would pay for a portion of the advertising.

The Danbury, Conn., company still produces commercials for the retailers—there are 10 spots in its library and five more are on the drawing boards—but now it asks the outlets to pay for them. Unlike the national spots, each of the retail commercials plays up specific products or services.

Although Ethan Allen's sales were down $3 million last year, compared with the $15 million in 1974, Mr. Weekes said, "It was the best performance in the industry." It will be even better in 1976 if people pay attention to the tag line in all of the advertising: "Come on over to our house. Ethan Allen Galleries."

STOCKS EDGE UP IN AMEX TRADING

Counter Gain Is Also Small —'Holding Pattern' Cited

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER Prices on the American Stock Exchange and in the over-the-counter market edged up yesterday for the second consecutive session.

Analysts noted that prices in recent sessions have been in a "holding pattern" pending fresh news developments. They suggested that the next likely inducement for investors would occur next month when corporations begin reporting their first-quarter results.

At the end of trading, the Amex market-value index eased 0.5 to 103.32 with declining issues outnumbering advances by 391 to 294. Volume fell to 2.78 million shares from 2.90 million on Friday.

Volume of trading in issues listed on the Amex, including transactions on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, dropped to 2.9 million shares from 3.0 million shares on Friday.

Option Trading Is Off In the counter market, the NASDAQ industrial average rose 0.4 to 97.23 while the composite index added 0.15 to 89.69. Advances outscored declines by 400 to 376. Volume dipped to 6.16 million shares from 6.73 million on Friday.

Option trading on the Amex dropped to 21,892 contracts yesterday from 24,860 on Friday. Open interest totaled 717,056 unexpired or unexercised contracts. On the Chicago Board Options Exchange, 57,108 contracts changed hands against 58,461 on Friday. Open interest amounted to 1,277,041 contracts.

The most-active issue on the Amex was Pan Ocean Oil which eased 3/8 to 14 1/8 on a turnover of 135,100 shares. Earlier this month the company reported it had completed the testing of a prolific oil well in the Brae field in the British North Sea.

Presley Companies, the second-most heavily traded stock, gained 1 1/8 to 16 1/8. The company said there was no company announcement planned or pending. Sky City Stores added 1/8 to 10 1/4. The operator of self-service discount stores announced that profits for the January quarter climbed to 77 cents a share from 49 cents a share the year before.

Ferry Service Is Rescued by the Energy Crisis

1926 and 1942, bids are being opened today for three new craft to help alleviate heavily congested bridges. Meanwhile, antiquated terminals are to be completely rebuilt. Boston experimented last fall with boat service from the South Shore to downtown and is planning a second trial for this summer.

The leader of the movement to bring back the ferry to San Francisco, a city that has been devoid of ferries since its fleet of 50 was retired the day the Golden Gate Bridge opened in 1937. A few years ago, as traffic on the bridge approached crisis dimensions, the city began considering the obvious alternatives of adding either a second deck to the Golden Gate or even an entire new span.

Ultimately, sounder planning prevailed and trial boat service was begun in the shadow of the bridge, between the same two terminals last used almost 40 years before.

The success of that single boat operation convinced the city to spend $52 million, largely from Washington, and on June 6, the first of four 750-passenger ferries now under construction is scheduled to begin service on a longer route.

In fact, the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, which is now giving grants to municipalities for ferries, has already dispensed more than $86 million for five projects scattered between Puerto Rico and Washington State.

Figures compiled by the Coast Guard show that the decline of ferries—from 584 in 1940 to 267 by the end of 1974—has come to a halt. The effects of the recent upsurge have not yet been counted. But the revival has already come to the boatbuilders and has even brought new entries into a business that once appeared doomed.

This is a new experience for us, but we intend to stay in it," said Jan Jarvie, ferry project manager at Campbell Industries, a major shipbuilder based in San Diego and now providing San Francisco's new boats.

Mr. Jarvie said that he now received as many as 10 invitations each year to bid for ferryboat contracts, far above the one or two a year he estimated, arrived just a few years back.

For New York City's Staten Island run, two "jumboferries," each carrying as many as 6,000 passengers, are under construction. Existing ferries have a passenger capacity of 3,500.

To the east, consideration of a bridge across Long Island Sound has been dropped and interest in ferry crossings has soared.

For the first time in as long as anyone can remember, the Orient Point-to-New London route is running year-round instead of just during the warm months.

Within a year, according to its young new owners, the converted World War II landing craft still in service is to be replaced by two 220-foot vessels under construction, and service will grow. Instead of the present ramshackle terminal hidden in the maze of New London's industrial grime, a new centrally located port is to be opened.

At the same time, another ferryboat company is trying to get permission to run boats from New London to Greenport, a small Long Island summer colony, and still a third group is plotting a more western route, from Norwalk, Conn., to Northport, L. I.

"We think there is a great future in this business," said Brent Lynch, one of the co-owners and once a General Motors executive. "You need efficient equipment, sufficient capacity, and you have to go when the public wants to go."

Mr. Lynch and his partner, John Peter Wronowski, a graduate of the California Institute of Technology, are something of an anomaly in the business. More than from the private sector, the push for ferries is coming from the public authorities, as in San Francisco and New Orleans.

In most cities, where public transportation has long been a losing proposition, private funds are, unavailable and the localities, with substantial help from the Federal Government, must do the job.

In announcing its acceptance of the labor proposals laid down by the Transportation Secretary for the Delmarva Peninsula route, Southern Railway's president, W. NATIONAL ENDING 'NO FRILLS' FARE

Others to Act—New Rates to Florida Almost as Cheap

By RICHARD WITKIN

National Airlines has decided to drop its "no frills" bargain time fare to Florida May 1, and competing airlines that never liked the idea in the first place are following suit.

A National spokesman said yesterday that the fare, offering a 35 percent discount for passengers willing to forgo meals and liquor and fly on weekdays, had fallen victim to a lot of other new bargains that imposed no such penalties. He insisted that competitors were wrong in arguing that the fare simply diverted customers from more profitable fare categories and generated little new business, declaring: "It was the right fare at the right time and place." The no frills bargain went into effect last April 14 on National routes to Florida.

Raw sugar prices on the same exchange eased about a half cent a pound. Secretary of State Kissinger's strong attack on Cuban military moves in Africa, which was delivered in Dallas last night, came hours after the market closed here at 2:55 P.M.

Normally, so strong a policy speech would roil the sensitive raw materials markets. As it was, prices of most key commodities were dull.

The important Midwest grain markets, for example, moved up a few cents, reflecting poor weather conditions in the Southwest winter wheat belt. At the close of the Chicago Board of Trade, wheat finished up 3 to 5 cents a bushel, corn rose a cent or two, soybeans declined 1/8 to 3/8 cents and oats were 2 cents lower to a cent higher.

The chief news in the grain market was that strong winds over the weekend had further eroded parts of the winter wheat belt. Soybean prices were shaved on expectations of another record soybean crop in Brazil where the harvest is now under way.

Wheat Prospects Cut

WASHINGTON, March 22 (UPI)—Drought in the Southern Great Plains probably has cut prospects for the 1976 winter wheat crop by about 250 million bushels, but there is no reason for concern about adequate supplies, the National Association of Wheat Growers said today.

You're at 35,000 feet and the button on your jacket comes loose. A problem, but not if you're on Japan Air Lines. On JAL, our flight attendants do the unexpected as a matter of course. Like sewing your button back on. Or covering you with a blanket when you've dozed off. Or turning on your reading light, or providing you with stationery to get a head start on letter-writing. And, as we do the unexpected, we do the expected. Like fast polar Flight 005 daily from New York to Tokyo.

With an early afternoon (12:10 PM)* departure. With a leg-stretching stop at Anchorage. And with a Tokyo arrival (6:05 PM) after the rush hour. Like first-run films on every flight. And gourmet Japanese and Continental cuisine. And with it all, simple thoughtful, care, concern. That concern is the first rule of Japanese hospitality. It is also the first lesson JAL people learn. City Fighting Navy's Plan to Move Office

By MICHAEL STERNE
City officials and members of Congress began a campaign yesterday to head off a Navy Department plan that would move 734 civilian jobs and a $12-million-a-year payroll from Brooklyn to the Great Lakes Naval Station 40 miles north of Chicago.

"We don't believe this plan is in the national interest, and it certainly isn't in the local or regional interest," said Alfred E. Eisenpreis, the city's Economic Development Administrator.
Navy officials said the main purpose of the proposal, which was announced last Wednesday, was to save the $1.3 million a year that the city pays the General Services Administration for three floors of offices in the Brooklyn Army Terminal. The space is used by the Navy Resale System Office, the buying organization that makes purchases totaling $1.5 billion a year to supply Navy exchanges and commissaries round the world.

Capt. Herbert Smith, executive officer at the Brooklyn Army Terminal, said that moving the buying office to a Navy-owned building in the Great Lakes station would bring the space costs down to $500,000 a year.
But Representative Leo C. Zeferetti, whose Bay Ridge-South Brooklyn district includes the terminal, said the loss of so many jobs would be a "disaster" for the city. In the last six years New York has lost more than 500,000 jobs.

Mr. Zeferetti said the high-cost of moving employees—much as $7,000 for each one—could wipe out for many years whatever savings the Navy might make. "It's just senseless," he said.

Capt. Smith affirmed that it was Navy policy to offer moving expenses to employees when their jobs were moved. At current costs, if only half the buying-office employees moved to Chicago the bill could come to more than $2.5 million.

At a meeting in Mr. Eisenpreis' office, Pat DiLorenzo, a secretary at the installation and a member of the Employees Committee, said: "This would be a terrible blow for most of us. I know I would be left without a job because we couldn't move. My husband and I just bought a house in Brooklyn last year."

Richard Berman, executive assistant to Senator Jacob K. Javits, said a joint effort by the city and state Congressional delegation was being organized to get the Navy Department to give up the plan.

It is part of an economy move by the Navy to save $56 million a year by closing or shrinking operations at 74 locations throughout the country. Also affected by the plan are 42 jobs in a Brooklyn printing office and six Naval Reserve centers in upstate New York.
If the plan goes through, it would further reduce the Federal work force in the city, which has been shrinking steadily for almost 20 years. Gerald J. Turetsky, regional administrator of the General Services Administration, said Federal civilian payrolls in the city has fallen from 118,576 to 93,507—a loss of 25,069 jobs—between 1970 and 1974.

In the 1960's, there were such major losses as 7,000 when the Brooklyn Navy Yard was closed, 500 when the Army PX office moved to Texas and 400 when the Army Quartermaster's Office moved to Philadelphia.
The New York office of the Bureau of Labor Statistics said other metropolitan areas also had been losing Federal jobs, though at a slower pace than New York. Big gains in the years from 1967 to 1974 were in Washington, up 30,000 jobs, and Virginia, up 34,000, indicating a concentration of Federal employment in and near the capital.

Mr. Eisenpreis said it would be pointless to move a buying office out of New York, which is the center of buying operations for most of the major retailing organizations of the country.
"The Navy will quickly find, he said, that it will have to be able to decide in local referendums—whether they wanted their Supreme Court judges to be elected or appointed, under a package of proposed state constitutional amendments introduced today by a bipartisan Senate task force.

The appointments would be made from among candidates approved by nonpartisan screening panels.
The package submitted today also includes an amendment providing for a state administrative, judge-part of an amendment the voters narrowly defeated last November—and legislation spelling out the powers of the new permanent commission on judicial conduct.
The idea of giving voters a local option on the method of judicial selection is an attempt to offer a geographical compromise on what has been a highly controversial issue. There is strong support for the so-called merit selection system in the metropolitan area, but equally strong opposition to it upstate.

WNET Gets Record $685,512 in Pledges by View

By LES BROWN

WNET/13 raised a record $685,512 in pledges from viewers during the 10-day national subscription campaign, "Festival '76," which ended Sunday night. The fund-raising event was built around 15 special programs acquired by the Public Broadcasting Service, most of them produced abroad, and classic movies from the Janus Films library recently licensed to public television.
Nationally, "Festival '76" raised more than $7.6 million for the stations that carried it, according to preliminary count by PBS. That figure is bound to increase because several stations have delayed the campaign to next month.

last year, the first ever conducted on a national scale, resulted in just over $6 million in donations from viewers.
A WNET spokesman noted that both the total amount raised by the station and the size of the average donation exceeded the levels of all previous on-air campaigns for funds.
The station estimates that 90 percent of the pledges represented new subscribers. The Foundation has promised to match all new contributions with an equal amount. Thus WNET will actually realize more than $1.2 million from the event.
Around 30,000 viewers responded to the periodic appeals for financial support aired in and around the special programs. This is approximately one-third more than responded to last year's national fund drive.

The average pledge came to $23. Based on previous drives, WNET had expected an average gift of $20.
Before the Festival period began on March 12, WNET scheduled fund-raising breaks around special programs on three occasions the previous week. These resulted in 1,530 pledges and around $55,000.
The program drawing the greatest number of pledges was "The Adams Chronicles" last Tuesday night. The break for an appeal within that episode brought 1,214 pledges. Others that produced large numbers of pledges were "Masterpiece Theater," "Nothing" (a document about Edith Piaf), "Monty Flying Circus," "The Cross Road" and "The Pops in Hollywood."

Biggest Night
WNET had its biggest of fund-raising on Sunday, March 14, when "Birth Without V" resulted in 1,530 pledges and around $55,000.

State Senate Unit Urges New Way to Select Judges

By LINDA GREENHOUSE

ALBANY, March 22—Judges on the state's highest court would be appointed by the Governor and voters would be able to decide in local referendums whether they wanted their Supreme Court judges to be elected or appointed, under a package of proposed state constitutional amendments introduced today by a bipartisan Senate task force.
The appointments would be made from among candidates approved by nonpartisan screening panels.
The package submitted today also includes an amendment providing for a state administrative, judge-part of an amendment the voters narrowly defeated last November—and legislation spelling out the powers of the new permanent commission on judicial conduct.
The idea of giving voters a local option on the method of judicial selection is an attempt to offer a geographical compromise on what has been a highly controversial issue. There is strong support for the so-called merit selection system in the metropolitan area, but equally strong opposition to it upstate.
"Nothing is more important as this has to be done uniformly or not at all," Mr. Thorp said, adding that there would be an "unsettled situation" in the state if one judicial district were electing its Supreme Court judges while in a neighboring district the Governor was appointing them.
Senator Gordon said the idea had been tried successfully in other states. In voter referendums held recently in Kansas, 23 out of 29 judicial districts opted for appointment of judges. There are 11 judicial districts in New York State.
For an amendment to become part of the State Constitution, it must be passed first by two successively elected Legislatures and then by the voters in a statewide referendum. Under the amendment introduced today, the judicial district referendums would be held in 1978.

The specific provisions of the proposed amendment are:
The Governor would name the seven judges of the Court of Appeals, based on the recommendations of a screening panel to be composed along with the amendment. These judges are now chosen in statewide elections.
The chief judge of the Court of Appeals would name a chief administrative judge for the entire state court system. The administrator would serve for a four-year term subject to a provisionally approved by the present chief judge, Charles D. Breitler.

New York City, which consists of more than one judicial district, would be treated as a single geographic entity. If the city's voters so decided, the Governor would name Supreme Court justices while the Mayor would choose judges of the Civil and Surrogate Courts.

"We'll give them a slice of life, not baloney."

Leda Sanford, Publisher, American Home

Most of the women's magazines are talking about the changing American woman in their advertising, in their promotion, in their presentations.

But most of the women's magazines are still publishing the same old 1950-formula woman's magazine. A little Caroline here, a mess of Elizabeth there. And every other month, the innermost, most intimate secrets of Jackie Plus 29 ways to cook hamburger, 19 ways to do your hair, 47 ways to become a total woman.

Fact: Women have changed.

More fact: Women's magazines really haven't.

That's why we have declared a New Deal for the American woman. We are dedicated to giving her a magazine to help her manage her home with style that will serve as an instant aid to the working homemaker. We're dedicating a brisk, journalistic style of writing. Provocative, intelligent writing. Not movie-star mush. Pizzazz for the people. They deserve it.

But enough. There's no sense reading about what we say we're doing. Pick up the April issue. See if you don't agree that American Home is a New Deal for the American woman.
